The first settlement was made within the limits of this county as early as the year 1840, by Col. James Wells. He settled on Chariton River in the southeast part of the county, where he erected a small water-mill. About the same time, or soon after, William Cooksey settled at the same place, and Cooksey and Wells were the first white men who settled in the county, although they were in the limits of what was then claimed as a part of the State of Missouri. Perhaps the next settler was J. F. Stratton, who came up from Missouri in the Spring of 1841, and took a claim two miles east of the present village of Cincinnati, in what is now Pleasant Township. He was the first white man who took a claim, or settled west of Chariton River, in the county. Soon after this, a man named Moore built a log house in what is now Caldwell Township, in the south part of the county. He subsequently, against his will, exchanged his home for one in the Penitentiary of Missouri, being sent there for horse-stealing. About the same time another man settled in the same vicinity who was accused of having more wives than the law recognized as proper for one man to have. He was arrested and confined in jail in Putnam County, Missouri. After his arrest a stranger rode up and enquired of one of his boys for the father. The boy said they had taken him to jail. "What for?" asked the stranger. "For keeping Jane," replied the lad.

In 1842, Solomon Hobbs located in Caldwell Township. The same year George Buckner and Robert Caughran also made settlements. J. F. Stratton selected his permanent location a few miles south of Unionville, and was the first settler in the northeast part of the county. In 1843 T. Jackson Packards came to the county and settled, or took claims in Shurod Township. George W. Perkins the same year settled in what is now Center Township, near the present town of Centerville. He was the first to engage in the cultivation of fruit trees.

Among other early settlers were Abraham Puthers, Benjamin Spooner, W. S. Manson, James McGehen, Woodford G. Jones, and John and Ira Perdue, John and William Crow, James Manson, S. F. Wadlington, and Jacob Coffman, all of whom came prior to 1846. The Crows and Mansons, and Mr. Wadlington, all settled as early as 1843. The Mansons were from Lee County, and located on what is now known as Mansons Branch, west of Centerville. William S. Manson had the honor of preaching the first sermon in the county west of Chariton River, and the place of preaching was at the first store started in the county. It was owned by S. F. Wadlington and located in the vicinity of the present town of Centerville. The first year's sales of our pioneer merchant were a dozen pairs of coarse shoes, half a dozen calico dress patterns, as many bolts of brown muslin, and a few coarse cashnets. These, with a sack of coffee and a few other groceries, constituted his stock in trade. In order to reduce his expenses to the measure of his profits, he did his own cooking. Most of the settlers at this early day were without families. Mr. Wadlington slept on a bed made of deer and bear skins, with a bundle of Coon skins for a pillow. He subsequently became an extensive farmer and stock dealer. He was the first mayor of Centerville, and has also been probate judge, justice of the peace, and deputy clerk.

The first religious society organized in the county was at the house of W. S. Manson, by Rev. Hugh Gibson. It consisted of six members, to-wit: Jesse Wood and wife, W. S. Manson and wife, Mrs. Rebecca Hopkins, and Mrs. Caughran. This was the beginning of the present large and flourishing Methodist society of Centerville.

J. F. Stratton built a mill in the vicinity of Centerville at an early day. He procured a bee-gum, put a round stone in it, and on this placed another stone, which was so contrived as to be turned with a crank. All the neighbors were welcome to come and grind their corn and buckwheat on it free of toll. The nearest mills where flour could be manufactured, were at Farmington and Bonaparte, 60 or 70 miles distant.

The first matrimonial transaction took place September 10, 1846, the parties being John M. Packard and Mary Ann Bond, and the officiating officer being William B. Packard, a justice of the peace and brother of the bridegroom. The groom was 24 years of age and the bride eighteen.

The first election was held at the house of J. F. Stratton, April 1, 1844, at which only nine votes were polled. The judges were J. F. Stratton, Wm. Money, and Joseph Crow, and the clerks William Crow and John Stratton. The electors were William Crow, Joseph Stratton, John Crow, Stephen Trimble, William Money, John W. Glancy, J. F. Stratton, Samuel Trimble, and Johiel Croxell.

ORGANIZATION.

The county was duly organized October 1, 1846, up to which time it had remained under the jurisdiction of Davis County. J. F. Stratton was Clerk of the District Court by appointment of Judge Charles Mason. Mr. Stratton became the organizing officer. Two of the first County Commissioners were Andrew Leech and William Whittaker. The first county officers elected after the organization, were Reuben Riggs, Bruce Packard, and George W. Perkins, Commissioners; Jack Perdue, Sheriff; William S. Manson, Treasurer and Recorder; and Benjamin Spooner, Probate Judge.

The question of location of the seat of justice had been agitated for a year or two previous to the organization, and its present location was finally chosen, where a town was laid out and named Chaldia. This name was subsequently changed to Centerville by legislative enactment. The beautiful public square where now stands the court house, was at that time covered by a dense growth of hazel and small trees.

COURT HOUSE.

In 1865 the county completed its fine court house at a cost of $32,000. It is a brick 52x76 feet, and two stories high, with a basement. On the first floor are halls crossing each way, and on this floor the county offices and fire-proof vaults are situated. A spacious court room and jury rooms occupy the upper story. The walls of the court room are handsomely frescoed with several appropriate designs, including the Goddess of Justice in the rear of the judge's stand, and the Goddess of Liberty on the front wall. The ceiling is frescoed in various figures surrounding the American Eagle in the center. The covering of the edifice is fire proof, and is surmounted by a tower rising 99¾ feet from the ground. The public square, in the center of which this temple of justice stands, is enclosed and well set with thrifty forest trees.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

The county maintains public schools to the number of about one hundred and fifteen, with school houses valued at about $90,000. The annual expenditure for the purpose of maintaining these schools averages upwards of $40,000.

RAILROADS.

The county is traversed by the southwestern branch of the C., R. I. & P. railroad with stations at Centerville, Unionville, and Numa, and by the Burlington and Southwestern, with stations at Moulton, Sedan, Caldwell, and Cincinnati. The Missouri, Iowa and Nebraska road enters near the southwest corner and terminates at present at Centerville. The St. L., K. C. & N. road also enters the county near the southeast corner to Moulton and thence passes eastward. These roads give the county convenient communication in nearly all directions and good facilities for shipping its produce.

CENTERVILLE.

The Town of Centerville was laid out in the Winter of 1846-7, Jonathan F. Stratton being the surveyor. The first house was built by S. F. Wadlington, on the west side of the Public Square. It was of logs 20x20 feet, and in this he opened the first store. All the settlers on the town plat in the Summer of 1847 were S. F. Wadlington, James Hughes, David Beeler and Charles H. Howell. Hughes and Beeler were blacksmiths. Amos Harris was the first lawyer who located in the town, and William S. Manson the first physician, both still citizens of the place. The first religious meetings and the first district court were held in the store of Mr. Wadlington.

The site of the town is located upon high, gently rolling ground, very near the center of the county, as its name indicates. It is advantageously situated in relation to timber, coal and building material, all of which are convenient. It is surrounded by a constantly improving farming country, as excellent as any in Iowa. It has good railroad communications, being upon the line of the southwestern branch of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Road. It is also the terminus of the Missouri, Iowa & Nebraska Railroad, which, at Alexandria, a short distance below Keokuk, connects with lines affording valuable and direct communications with important Eastern cities. It therefore has the benefit of competing lines of communication with the East. It is also within easy access to communication with St. Louis south, and all the principal points north by means of the St. Louis, Kansas City & Northern Railroad, which passes through the southeast part of the county, crossing the east and west lines. The latter, however, are of chief importance to this county. These communications give Centerville important advantages as a market and shipping point for the produce of the country. Its mercantile trade is extensive and steadily increasing, being represented by a large number of business firms in nearly all branches of trade, not a few of whom carry heavy stocks of goods, and employ a good deal of capital. A national bank, good hotels, several good manufacturing establishments, agricultural implement depots, etc. are among the business enterprises of the place.

The town is regularly laid out with handsome streets. The business portions of the town, with the exception of the depot and warehouses, surrounds the central square on which stands the court house. The business buildings, as a class, are very good, many of them being constructed of brick, several of which are three stories in height. The residences of the place are many of them handsome and even elegant. The original plat of the town has been considerably enlarged by various additions to supply the demands of increasing growth. The railroad depot is near the southeast corner of the town, and adjacent to the track on the side opposite the city are the handsome fair grounds of the Appanoose County Agricultural Society.

The professions are well represented in this young city by prominent members of the bar and skillful physicians. Several benevolent and secret societies are also maintained. There are church organizations of nearly all the leading denominations, and nearly all have good houses of worship. The public schools are maintained at a high standard of excellence, graded and classified under skillful management, and employing a principal and from eight to ten assistants as instructors. The city is duly incorporated under the general law, its municipal powers being vested in a council consisting of a mayor, recorder and five trustees.

The first newspaper was the Appanoose Chieftain, commenced in October, 1856, by the Fair Brothers. After publishing it nearly two years, they sold it to P. H. & George Binkley, and in 1859 they sold out to W. P. Gill and M. Maine, who in 1860, sold to George Buckingham. In 1862, O. N. Udell bought the office and changed the name of the paper to Appanoose Democrat, and continued to issue it until 1864, when it ceased to exist. The press and material were sold to D. L. Strickler, who founded the Republican paper called the Loyal Citizen. In June, 1865, he sold the office with its patronage to M. M. Walden. It is now called the Centerville Citizen, published Fridays, by W. O. Crossly & Co., edited by W. O. Crossly. It is a nine column folio sheet, and has a valuable news and job office, and a flourishing business.

The People's Journal is a Democratic newspaper, established by the present editor and proprietor, Henry S. Sherman, in 1872. It is a handsome sheet of eight pages, five columns to the page, issued Fridays, and has a good outfit and a liberal patronage.

MOULTON.

Moulton is a town of considerable importance, about two miles from the east line of the county, and six from the state line. It is situated at the junction of the St. Louis, Kansas City & Northern Railway with the Burlington & Southwestern. It is surrounded by a fine, well improved country, bountifully supplied with timber and coal, and therefore enjoys a very good trading market and shipping facilities. Its location is on the divide between the tributaries of the Mississippi and Missouri Rivers, being what was known to the early settlers as the "Bee Trace." The town was laid out in 1868, and was named in honor of the chief engineer of the North Missouri Railroad. The first man whose faith in the new town manifested itself in works was Jacob Neal, who erected the first house. The first business house was erected by W. A. Lowery. At present it has quite an extensive local trade, with every prospect of steady increase. It has a good graded school, churches and other institutions to promote the intellectual and moral welfare of its citizens and youth. The Moulton Weekly Record is a bright, newsy, local paper, established in 1874, Republican in politics, published Tuesdays, by G. D. Porter.

UNIONVILLE.—This is a village in Udell Township, twelve miles northeast of Centerville. It is on the south side of a large body of timber on Soap Creek. There is in the vicinity a large and wealthy settlement of Dunkards, who hold regular meetings of their society and have a church near the village.

CINCINNATI.—This is a village and station on the R. & S. W. R. R., ten miles southwest of Centerville. Its location is on a beautiful and highly improved prairie, with an abundance of timber and coal in the immediate vicinity. The place was laid out in 1856, by Solomon Holbrook, L. R. Holbrook, Daniel McDonald and Joseph Welsh.

The other villages are Moravia, Iconium, Millidgeville, Walnut City, Beljair, Numa, Orleans, Caldwell, Dean, Hilltown, Sedan, Livingston, Hubbsville and Albany. There are also post offices named Griffinsville, Kirkwood and Jerome.

TAYLOR COUNTY.

This is one of the southern tier of counties, and the third in order, counting eastward from the Missouri River. It contains nominally sixteen congressional townships, but in consequence of the irregularity caused by the correction line which passes east and west near its center, and also of the obliquity of the southern boundary line, a portion of the townships are not of full size. The superficial area is about five hundred and thirty-six square miles.

PHYSICAL FEATURES AND RESOURCES.

The general character and surface configurations of Taylor County are gently undulating and rolling prairie, yet it possesses considerable diversity, and even beauty of scenery, along the valleys of many of the larger streams. In the northeastern portion, the altitude attained is probably greater than in any other of the counties bordering on the Missouri line, and having no large streams to traverse its surface, but being most admirably drained by a magnificent system of small ones, which, ramifying into every portion of the county, furnish such perfect drainage that not a single pond, swamp or marsh is to be found. The most important streams, which are dignified by the name of rivers, are the Platte, in the southeast, the East Nodaway, in the northwest, and the East, Middle and West One Hundred and Two, which, flowing through the county at nearly equal distances from each other, and with their numerous affluents, admirably water and drain the larger portion of the county, affording excellent stock water, and a number of good mill powers, which owing to the loose, sandy nature of the banks are of little value, except in a few cases where they have been improved.

There are two explanations given of the origin of the rather singular name, One Hundred and Two, as applied to the streams mentioned above, which flowing south into the Missouri, form one stream, which is called One Hundred and Two River. One statement is, that an Indian died somewhere on this stream, who was at the time said to be one hundred and two years of age, and from this circumstance the stream received its name. A more reasonable explanation is, however, given by Edward Hall, a pioneer settler of Missouri, who gives the facts as having occurred within his own knowledge. He says that at an early day a military road was being surveyed from some point on the Missouri River, in the State of Missouri, in the direction of what was then known as Platte purchase. When the surveyors came to a certain tributary of the Platte River, the distance by the chain was just one hundred and two miles, and they therefore called the stream One Hundred and Two River.

Some portions of Taylor County have considerable timber, while other parts have little or none. Along each of the principal streams, as well as bordering most of the smaller ones, there runs a belt of woodland varying from a few rods to a mile or a mile and a half in width. The south half has the best timber, while the largest and best body in the county is on Honey Creek, some five or six miles southeast of Bedford. The southeast corner township is abundantly supplied, there being heavy bodies on the Platte. There is also a considerable quantity of good timber along the west branch of the One Hundred and Two River, north of Bedford, and in the northwest township bordering on the East Nodaway. The timber is mostly composed of the various kinds of oaks, such as white, red, jack and burr oak, black and white walnut, cottonwood, linn, etc., etc. With judicious use there is an abundance for the present and immediate future, and where the fires are kept out, which is generally the case at this time, the groves rapidly encroach upon the prairie. Some kinds when planted, especially the cottonwood and soft or silver leaf maple, make a vigorous growth. Cottonwood trees planted as mere sprouts six years ago, now measure twenty-six inches in circumference. This timber is not so good as most others for ordinary use, but so rapid is its growth that in five years after planting it becomes available for fuel. It is believed by those best posted that, notwithstanding the amount which has been consumed, the supply of timber is now greater than it was ten years ago, a result of keeping down the prairie fires that formerly annually swept over the surface of the county, and thousands of acres, which, at the time of the early settlement were bare prairie, are now covered with fine young groves. The bottom lands along the streams are generally narrow and dry, making excellent farming lands. From the margin of the streams the ground rises gradually to an altitude of about one hundred feet, forming divides or smooth belts of upland prairie, lying about equi-distant from the streams on either side, often extending for a long distance without any perceptible elevation or depression, forming the best natural roads in the world.

The soil is from one to two feet deep, of a black, vegetable mold, with a slight mixture of sand, and of almost inexhaustible fertility, belonging wholly to that class known as the warm soils. Below this loose, friable nature, is found a tough, stiff subsoil, upon a substratum of what is termed joint clay, of several feet in thickness, which, during the dry seasons, is filled with innumerable cracks and crevices. During the wet seasons the water readily percolating through the loose soil above enters this body of clay, which acts as a sponge or reservoir, holding immense quantities of water in reserve for the next drought. It is to this peculiar geological formation that this section of the state is indebted for the good crops it has raised, while other portions of the West equally favored by showers have suffered from an almost entire failure. This vast quantity of water which is held in reserve is drawn up by the action of the sun's rays upon the soil above, and vegetation is thereby kept growing through weeks and months of the severest drought; thus, while the soil of Taylor County is so dry that the farmer can start his plow in a few hours after a heavy rain, it is yet able to pass uninjured through droughts that would ruin almost any other county. All the cereals, such as wheat, corn, oats, rye and barley, are raised in abundance, while vegetables of all kinds grow as large here, when properly cultivated, as in any portion of the West. At present the chief marketable product is live stock, particularly cattle. The extensive ranges and the excellent quality of the wild grasses, together with the abundant supply of living water, render it one of the most desirable stock-raising counties in the state, which advantages have been fully appreciated by a number of the farmers of the county, who, in a few years, have made handsome fortunes. Considerable attention has been paid to fruit culture, which has met with a good degree of success, there now being a large number of orchards in bearing, which produce all kinds of small fruits and vines do well, and produce in abundance; while such wild fruits as plums, grapes, crab apples, gooseberries and strawberries are plenty in and about the groves and along the streams, and mulberries are quite common.

Coal is found in limited quantities in this county, several banks having been opened on East Nodaway River, in the northwest townships, the vein being about fifteen inches in thickness. The coal is of a good quality, and finds a ready market. These beds belong to the upper coal measure, and there can be no reasonable doubt that the formation which contains the important beds of coal that are now mined in the valley of the Des Moines River extends beneath this county, and it is reasonable to infer that it contains deposits of coal. It is generally believed, however, that the strata which rest upon these coal-bearing formations, as well as those formations themselves, thicken gradually to the westward and southward; so that if they do exist in this county they will require considerable capital and labor to reach them.

A fair quality of building stone is found in several places, there being four quarries on the east branch of One Hundred and Two, within half a mile of Bedford, and others on the same stream, about two miles southwest. The product of these quarries is a species of limestone that is easily dressed, making good caps and sills and a good quality of quicklime, a considerable quantity of which is annually manufactured from it. The court house and school house in Bedford are both constructed of this stone, and are both substantial and well constructed buildings. On the East Nodaway, above the vein of coal, is a hard, blue, argillaceous limestone, which is not easily dressed, but is suitable for rough walls. The northeastern and southwestern part of the county are destitute of stone, as far as any discoveries have yet been made. Material for the manufacture of a good article of common brick is found in abundance in many portions of the county.

EARLY HISTORY.

One of the earliest settlers of Taylor County must have been Jonah Reed, in section 7, township 68, range 35, near the Page County line. In the Fall of 1851, Samuel Scarlett bought the farm of Mrs. Reed, who had resided on it some seven years, and whose husband, Jonah Reed, had died some two or three years before. Stephen H. Parker settled in the county as early as 1846, as his son, Henry Parker, was born October 27th of that year, and is claimed to have been the first white child born in Taylor County.

A permanent organization of the county was effected in February, 1851, when the first county officers elected were Jacob Ross, Levi L. Hayden, and Daniel Smith, Commissioners; John Hayden, Clerk; Hampton Bennington, Probate Judge; John Hayden, Recorder and Treasurer; James B. Campbell, Sheriff; Jacob Miller, Inspector of Weights and Measures. At this time the entire county was a single civil township called Jackson, and John W. Miller and Seymour Coffman were elected justices of the peace. On the 26th of February, 1851, the above named officers elect met in a special session for the first transaction of county business at the house of Jacob Miller, about two and a half miles southeast of the present county seat, and were duly sworn into office, and proceeded to organize for business. The sheriff who had been appointed to organize the county was Elisha Parker. The next place at which county business was transacted, and at which the next meeting of the commissioners was held, was the house of Judge Jacob Ross, about two and three-fourths of a mile southeast of Bedford. This place seems to have been about the center of the population at that time. At this meeting the county was divided into two civil townships, called respectively Polk and Benton. They also appointed William B. Wamley, Justice of the Peace, and Preston B. McGuire, Constable of Polk Township; and John W. Miller, Justice of the Peace, and James K. Miller, Constable of Benton Township.

The first county assessor was James B. Campbell, who spent four days in assessing the county, for which services his compensation amounted to $4. The taxes levied for the first year amounted to $62.37, including state, county, school and poll taxes. Of this thirteen dollars, four cents and four mills was state tax, being the tribute that Taylor County paid the first year for the privilege of a county organization. The taxable property of the county at this time amounted to $6,522. This property was own by sixty-three persons, resident and non-resident. The richest man assessed in t county was Isaac Dowis, who paid taxes on property valued at $424, while Nan Cobble paid on a valuation of $8—perhaps an only cow. And so the machinery of t county government was set in motion.

On the 18th of August, 1851, the county contained males over 21 years of age, females over 21 years of age, 70; males under 21 years of age, 134; females under years of age, 120—making a total population of 393.

At the August election of 1852, the following county officers were elected: Jo Lowe, County Judge; William Hindman, Clerk; William N. McAfee, Sheriff; Willi Ferguson, Superintendent of Roads; and Jacob Ross, Surveyor.

Up to this time Taylor County included the territory now embraced in Ringgo and the County Judge of Taylor County, on the 16th of October, 1862, ordered th Ringgold County be a separate election precinct.

The early settlers of this county consisted mostly of persons who had emigrat from the Southern States, supposing at the time that they were settling in Missouri, t southern portion of this tier of counties being on what is known as the Disput Territory. The following description of the early settlers by a local writer will be rea with interest. He says: "The early settlers of this county were from the slave-holdi states, and came here thoroughly imbued with all the prejudices, and addicted to the habits and customs of Southern life. They invariably settled in the timber on the south side of some grove, building their cabin, stables, etc., in the edge of the tim and making their farms in the prairie. Their cabins were built of logs, sometim hewed, but in most cases laid up without hewing, and covered with boards or wi the eastern people call shakes. They contained no loft or chamber floor, there bei no lumber in the country to make any with. The cracks were plastered with m made from the soil, and a chimney built of sod cut from the prairie, stood at one en and the door, if but one, invariably on the south side: if two, they were opposite eac other on the north and south. The floors were made of puncheons which consisted a log split in two parts, and the flat side hewed as smooth as convenient with an a The "door shutter" was made from boards the same as those composing the roof. Some instances there was a small window of from four to six lights, but in most cas the door was left open in the coldest of weather to admit light. Living in cabins a this kind were about fifty families, which composed the inhabitants of Taylor Coun up to the year 1854. Each man kept from two to six big savage dogs, a "nag," a yoke steers, when able to own them; and the more wealthy ones owned wagons. The on cereal raised was corn, which constituted the main article of food for man and bea The uniform diet of the inhabitants consisted of corn bread, bacon and coffee. T bread was prepared by mixing water and a little salt with the meal until it was also the consistency of brick mortar; then molding it into small oblong balls with t hands, which were called "dodgers." These dodgers when baked and mixed with t grease fried from bacon, were eaten by the natives with a relish unknown to'd epicure. During the Fall and fore part of the Winter, the bill of fare was increased b the addition of an occasional slice of fresh beef or venison. The market was supplie with beef in the following manner: Whenever a farmer had a "beef critter" wished to dispose of, he informed the inhabitants of the county that at a given perio which was generally on Saturday, and sometimes on Sunday, he would make a sho ing match. At the time appointed, a large portion of the farmers assembled at t place designated, each with his trusty rifle and ammunition. A purse was soon mad up from the crowd by contributions amounting in all to the value of the beef, with th understanding that the best shot drew the first choice, and the second best, the seco choice, and so on. In this way the beef, hide, tallow and all was divided out amo the "boys," each receiving in proportion to his skill as a marksman. On such occasio there was always plenty of whisky, and unless there were two or three fights, a somebody got badly bruised or cut to pieces with a knife, the "boys" thought they ha a dull time."

The first term of the District Court was held September 15, 1851, at the house o Jacob Ross, Judge James Sloan presiding. John Hayden was Clerk, and James Campbell, Sheriff. The attorneys present were George P. Styles, A. C. Ford and Jac Dawson. The last named was appointed Prosecuting Attorney. Indictments we found against Isaac Dowis and S. E. Godfrey for assault and battery upon one Joh Hayden.

The first attorney admitted was Benjamin Rector, at the July term of 1852. H became somewhat prominent as a lawyer in this part of Iowa. At the breaking o of the rebellion he went into the service as Captain of Co. A, Fourth Iowa Cavalr and was promoted to Major, June 4, 1862. He was taken prisoner October 11, 186 exchanged October 29th, and died at Helena, Arkansas, January 21st, 1863.

The following are the names of the attorneys who practiced in the District Cou of this county up to September, 1855: George P. Stiles, A. C. Ford, Jacob Dawson, W. Fenns, L. Lingenfelter, D. H. Solomon, William Kelsey, J. J. Barwick, A. H. Ea Benjamin Rector, J. H. Dews, J. W. Russell, Joseph A. Hews and John Wilson.

On the 5th of April, 1853, the County Judge made an order directing the Coun Surveyor to lay off the Town of Bedford. In May of the same year, Henry W. Bak was appointed a commissioner to sell town lots—the first public sale of lots to be Ju 4, 1853.

The first marriage was of Franklin M. Hindman and Eveline Husband, by Steph H. Parker, a justice of the peace, December 18, 1851. The groom is said to have been relative of the somewhat noted Confederate General Hindman. The first divorce w at the March term of 1856—Eliza Marr vs. John Marr. The first public road laid o in the county was in September, 1851, John Kroot, Preston B. McGuire and Benjam Turner being appointed viewers to locate the same.

RAILROADS, COUNTY BUILDINGS, ETC.

The railroad facilities of this county are very good, as the Crestin branch of t Burlington and Missouri River Railroad, now operated by the Chicago, Burlington a Quincy Company, passes through the central portion of the county, the former nort east to southwest accommodating the county with three stations at convenient inte vals, while the main line of the same road and the Clarinda branch run within a fe miles of the northwest part of the county on the north and west sides.

The court house is built of hammered stone, quarried in the vicinity of Bedfo and was erected in 1864. It is 30 by 40 feet in size, and two stories high. The low story is divided into four offices, with a hall passing through. There are two fir proof vaults. The upper story is used as a court room.

The common schools of the county are in a flourishing condition, a marked progre and increased interest having been manifested in the last few years, so that almo the new counties of the state probably few excel it in the character of its schools or the ability and success of its teachers. According to the report of 1873 there were the county eighty-six ungraded and seven graded schools, employing sixty-six ma and eighty female teachers, and enrolling twenty-seven hundred and forty-six pupil The total value of school property is about $60,000, while the annual amount expend is about $22,610, and the amount of the permanent school fund is $27,337.12.

THE PRESS.

There are at the present time three papers published in the county, viz.: The Argu by the Hale Bros.; the Iowa Southwest, S. Lucas, at Bedford; and the Lenox Ti Table, established October 2, 1874, by Townsand & Lufton, who still are in charge of and in September, 1875, enlarged it to a five column quarto, which they are making enterprising paper.

BEDFORD.

The seat of justice of Taylor County was located at Bedford in March, 1852, by co missioners appointed for that purpose by an act of the General Assembly. It is ve pleasantly situated on a gently rolling second bottom, rising from the west bank of t East One Hundred and Two Rive . It is convenient to water and stone, and is su rounded by beautiful farming land, the ground on all sides rising something in t form of an amphitheater, affording many prominent and commanding building sit The first sale of lots took place July 4, 1852, and the first building, a double log hou designed and used for several years as a store and dwelling, was erected on the corn of Main and Water streets by O. W. Fenno. The second house was a small dwelli built of hewed logs by Edwin Houck, on the opposite side of Main street from the ot last mentioned. Improvement at first was very slow, about the only building be erected during 1854 was a double log house by the firm of Thornton & Cadle, in whic they kept a small stock of dry goods, groceries, etc. Early in the Spring of 1856 t town commenced settling with Eastern people, and in less than two years from th time the inhabitants numbered over four hundred.

Being surrounded by a rich and quite well improved agricultural country, with a large town in the vicinity and possessing an intelligent, enterprising class of busine men, it has secured, and will no doubt retain, a good retail trade. It has a good class dwellings and business houses, and a substantial stone school house, in size 40x60 feet, was erected in 1868. It is furnished with folding iron seats and desks, and will accommodate four hundred pupils. The building stands on a beautiful eminence at the north side of town, where a full block has been appropriated for the purpose. The building is of hammered stone, and constructed with some regard to architectural taste presents a fine appearance, and is an honor to the town. The school is in charge of a corps of experienced teachers, who are making it one of the best in the southwest part of the State. Several handsome churches adorn the town, and belong respectively to the Methodist, Baptist, Presbyterian and Christians, while the Masons have a good hall, and with the Odd Fellows have flourishing lodges. Among the manufacturing interests may be mentioned two flouring and saw mills, and a large woolen mill which has been in successful operation for a number of years.

The other villages and post offices in the county, some of which are places of considerable importance, are Lenox, Conway, Mormontown, Buchanan, Dan, Siam, Platteville, Gravity and Holt.

MONTGOMERY COUNTY.

Montgomery County is the second from the Missouri River in the second tier from the south line of the state. It contains a superficial area of 432 square miles, or 276,480 acres.

STREAMS.

The county is well watered by numerous streams, some of which are of a character to afford good mill sites. The names of the principal streams are Middle Nodaway, West Nodaway, Tarkio Creek, East Nishnabotany, Walnut Creek, and Indian Creek. West Nodaway enters the county near the northeast corner, and runs nearly directly south across the east range of townships. Middle Nodaway enters Montgomery from Adams County near the middle of the line between them, and crossing the southeast corner of the latter, forms a junction with West Nodaway a short distance above the south line of the county. The next considerable stream west is Tarkio Creek, which rises in the north part of the county, and runs nearly south, passing out a little east of the middle of the south line. The next and largest stream in the county is East Nishnabotany, which enters a little west of the middle of the north line, and flows across the county in a direction somewhat west of south. Among its tributaries which serve to drain the county and afford excellent water for stock, are Coe's Branch, Long Branch, Romp Creek, and Red Oak Creek, all flowing in from the east. Some four or five miles further west, and running almost parallel with the East Nishnabotany River we come to Walnut Creek, which also has several tributaries. Indian Creek crosses the northwest corner township, and also passes through a corner of the next township south. Several of these streams afford sufficient water power for mills. There is one on Middle Nodaway, near Valiska; three on West Nodaway; three on East Nishnabotany, and two on Walnut Creek, making some ten water mills now in the county. The streams are all supported by springs, and consequently never go dry, but always afford a plentiful supply of fine living water. There is living water on nearly every half section in the county. Wells of the purest cold water are easily obtained in all parts by digging rarely to exceed twenty feet, and numerous springs are also found along the water courses. But few counties are better watered than Montgomery, every part being favored in this respect.

TIMBER.

The best timber is to be found on the West Nodaway and East Nishnabotany, the finest bodies being along the latter stream, and extending in a belt entirely across the county. There are likewise some fine groves on Tarkio, Walnut, and Indian Creeks. The timber, as usual, in this prairie county, is confined to the valleys along the streams, there being but few groves on the high prairie. Where the fires have been kept away, however, for a few years, the young timber is gradually encroaching, and much of this young growth is large enough for good fire-wood. It is to be hoped that the people will spare no pains to preserve it. It is estimated that about one-tenth of the county is timber. As the water courses are pretty equally distributed to all parts of the county, so, too, is the timber. The principal varieties are red oak, burr oak, white, hickory, ash, elm, hackberry, honey locust, linn, cottonwood, soft maple, and white; with also some cherry and mulberry. There are no white oak to be found in the county. Among wild fruits which are plenty, may be mentioned the plum, grape, strawberry and gooseberry. The wild, or crab apple, is also abundant along the streams at the edges of the timber.

A few artificial groves have been cultivated, and with some attention in this direction the county may in a few years feel no serious inconvenience from the scarcity of timber, especially as the lands are now being pretty generally enclosed with hedges. The railroads furnish lumber to Montgomery County for all necessary uses in building.

The three kinds of timber which are most abundant and most used here, are red oak, burr oak, and black walnut. These varieties all grow on the rich bottom soil, which has not clay enough for the white oak to flourish in, hence it is not found here. The reason why timber appears only along the valleys, is because there the fires have not so readily swept over and destroyed it, there being in such localities more moisture and less exposure to the effects of the winds that sweep over the higher grounds. There is no element in the soil uncongenial to the growth of many kinds of timber. This fact is abundantly demonstrated where artificial groves have been planted. The raising of timber is more a matter of time than of labor.

SURFACE AND SOIL.

The surface of the county is generally undulating, as a consequence of the numerous streams which are distributed in all directions. Along the streams, however, the bottoms are large, often spreading along the Nodaway and Nishnabotany to the width of from one to three miles. These bottom lands are equal in fertility to those of the Miami or Wabash. They are all above high-water mark, and are not at any season of the year subject to malaria. Where not covered with timber, or in cultivation, a heavy growth of wild grass annually covers the ground. It requires a strong team to turn this sod and bring this land into cultivation, but after the first year it is always loose, and easily worked. It produces the most luxuriant crops of corn, as well as grain of all kinds.

The higher prairie lands are also very fertile, and are equally as good for the cereals as the bottom lands. There are but few gravel points, or places subject to wash, and the soil is of such a character as to suffer but little, either from extreme dry or wet weather. In excessively wet weather, the rolling surface with the numerous streams, drain the land very rapidly, while in dry weather the sub-soil is of such a nature as to retain moisture, and supply it to vegetation as needed for its growth. In the cultivation of his crops, the farmer necessarily loses but little in consequence of his ground being too wet to work.

MINERALS.

Some coal has been found in the northeast portion of the county, being doubtless the same bed which appears in Adams County. Its exposure in this county is in conformity with the same general line of the exposures in that, and being at right angles with the course of the streams. The vein does not appear to be more than twenty inches in thickness. About six miles north of Red Oak are large quarries of limestone which furnish a large part of the quicklime and building stone used in the county. Clays suitable for brick and pottery are obtained in different places. In the central part of the county a red clay or ochre is found, which makes a very good mineral paint, and has been manufactured and used to a considerable extent.

There are also some beds of sandstone appearing at different places, especially along the slopes to the valley of the Nishnabotany. An exposure of this sandstone appears within the limits of the town of Red Oak Junction.

Brick, of tolerable good quality, have been manufactured at several points in the county, including Red Oak Junction and Arlington.

PRODUCTIONS.

In its wild and uncultivated condition, the whole face of the county is covered with a spontaneous growth of grass and various kinds of vegetation, on which vast herds may graze and fatten. But the plow easily prepares the soil for the production of all crops common to the latitude, and it rarely fails to yield an abundant return for the labor bestowed upon it. It is well adapted to corn, wheat, oats, rye, and all kinds of vegetables. Irish and sweet potatoes, cabbages, pumpkins, squashes, and melons grow easily and come to great perfection. As yet, the various kinds of noxious weeds, common in the older portions of the state, have not intruded on the operations of the farmer here, making the labor of producing a crop comparatively easy and agreeable. Those pests of the older farming districts, known as the cuckold burr, Spanish needle, thistle, etc., are little known here. The rich loam which covers the surface of the prairie to the depth of from one to five feet, only requires the seed to be planted or sown, and the bestowal of a little additional labor, to insure a good crop. But in the ratio that labor is bestowed, and the soil cultivated, will all crops generally be improved in quantity and quality. Good crops are made with little cultivation, but far better with attentive labor and culture.

The Hungarian grass is raised to some extent and generally yields heavily. Timothy, blue grass, and clover, have been tested sufficiently to prove that the soil is well adapted to their culture. For timothy, especially, no soil can excel the bottom lands along the streams in this county.

Fruit, so far as tried, has succeeded. There are in the county a few bearing orchards, and some kinds of apples have yielded well, and among them, especially, the White Winter Pearmain. Many young orchards have recently been planted, and some attention is given to the raising of the various kinds of small fruits. Currants, gooseberries, raspberries, and strawberries, embracing several varieties of each, have been tried, and are found to succeed admirably. The soil and climate seem to be naturally adapted to grapes, and indeed the same may be said of all this part of the state. Grapes, as yet are only cultivated to a very limited extent, but we have seen some fine bearing vines about Red Oak Junction, and the universal testimony is, that they do well. The Concord is the variety chiefly planted.

A pretty general interest seems to be manifested in hedging. All that have been properly planted and cared for, have done well. For this purpose, the Osage orange has been chiefly used, but there are some hedges made of the native honey locust, that promise to succeed. Many farmers, especially in the west part of the county, have resorted to wire fences. They are said to be cheaply constructed, and answer the purpose very well. They are, however, not to be compared with hedges, as they get out of repair frequently. They are constructed by setting posts at from twelve to twenty feet apart, and stretching the wire through staples driven into the posts. There are usually from three to five wires, with the lower ones closer together, as board fences are usually made. At proper intervals, a reel, or apparatus for increasing or lessening the tension of each wire, is attached. If they become slack, as they probably may by expansion in warm weather, they are easily wound up to the proper degree of tension.

The superior grazing advantages of this county, as a matter of course, render it well adapted to the raising of stock. Many fine herds of cattle are to be seen on the prairies in all directions, for which the owners always find a ready market at their doors. Cattle buyers from a distance visit the county regularly and buy up all suitable for the market, at remunerative prices. This is the great source of profit, as yet, to the farmers of this county. So great has been the demand, and so tempting the prices offered, that some farmers have really sold off their stock too closely. There is no trouble in disposing of all they can raise. As to horses, mules, swine and sheep, it may be said that all of them do well. Nearly every farmer has a good flock of sheep, and I doubt not that wool growing may be successfully engaged in here. The finer grades of sheep have not yet been introduced, or at least to any considerable extent.

It may be a matter of importance to state that nearly all the streams in the county are plentifully supplied with fish. Many are caught in the waters of the Nodaway and Nishnabotany, and at the proper seasons of the year fishing is resorted to by many of the people, both for pleasure and profit.

As for game, it may be stated that prairie chickens, turkeys, ducks, and quails are found in great abundance; and occasionally, along the valleys and in timber, the lucky hunter may still bring down a lordly buck. But, like the Indian, his race is rapidly yielding to the encroachments of civilization.

EARLY HISTORY.

By an act of the Legislature of Iowa, approved January 12, 1853, Montgomery and Union Counties were attached to Adams for revenue and judicial purposes, each constituting a civil township, the first election in Montgomery to be held at the house of Amos G. Lowe. On the 15th of January, 1851, an act had been approved defining the boundaries of Montgomery and other counties. This is the first legislation in which the name of the county appears, and in this act the present boundaries are fixed.

The first County Judge was Amos G. Lowe, a native of Kentucky. He is still a respected citizen of the county. The first Clerk of the District Court was S. C. Dunn, who was appointed by the County Judge, October 6, 1853. The first Treasurer was John W. Patterson, who was also appointed by the Judge, October 14, 1853. The first order made by Judge Lowe is dated August 15, 1853, and authorizes the levy of taxes for certain purposes.

The salary of the County Judge for the first year's services was $50; of the Clerk, $25; and the Treasurer, $30. For the second year, the Judge consented to increase the salary of the Clerk to $30! What extraordinary means were used to bring about this reckless streak of extravagance and favoritism, does not appear!

The first marriage license was issued to Samuel McNelly and Martha Elizabeth Donaho, January 20, 1855. On the first of October, 1856, the Judge made the following order: "Ordered, that T. A. Petty be, and is hereby appointed Commissioner to sell county liquors for medical, mechanical and sacramental purposes in Frankfort, until the first Monday in May next, unless sooner removed by the Court."

Among the first white settlers of the county, were Amos G. Lowe, the first County Judge; William Dunn, who had a contract from the Government for surveying land; John Stafford, Carle Means, John Ross, James Carlisle, James Ross, Aaron Vice, L. C Cook, and Mr. Gaynor who settled on the Nishnabotany as early as May in the history of the county. Joseph Zuber settled near the present town of Red Oak Junction. Daniel Silkett was the pioneer mill builder in the county. He was the owner of five mill sites, and built the first on the Nishnabotany in 1856. Having built two mills, in erecting the third he fell a victim to his enterprise, and died from exposure before completing it.

The following are also among the early settlers: Samuel Baker, George West, ——Sager. The earliest settlement made in the county was on the Nodaway, in the southeast part. "Ross Grove" is a large body of timber in the southeast corner township.

COUNTY SEAT.

The commissioners to locate the first county seat were William S. Townsend, R. W. Stafford, and R. B. Lockwood. They seem to have received their appointment from the Judge of the Sixth Judicial District. On the 22d day of July, 1854, they made their report to the County Judge, having selected the southwest quarter of section 17, township 72 north, range 37 west. The report and location were duly accepted by the judge, and the commissioners allowed $12 each for their services. The judge, having hailed from Frankfort in Kentucky, duly christened the new town by the same name. The first house was built in the place by John Burnside. He was probably the "first settler" there, as he brought water out of his well by a ladder, and, ground his corn in a coffee mill. Well ropes, buckets, and flouring mills were not plenty in Montgomery County in those days. Among the first settlers of Frankfort were also Dr. Asa Bond, Judge A. G. Lowe, Samuel Baer, W. L. Boyaston, and Thomas Davis. J. B. Packard, Esq., who subsequently served several terms as County Treasurer, settled in Frankfort in July, 1856, and W. W. Merritt, who has several times served the county in the Legislature, in May, 1857.

For several years Frankfort prospered, and grew to become a village of some importance, until 1863, when a vote of the county was taken on the removal of the county seat to Red Oak Junction. On the ground of informality in the vote of one township, the election was contested, but the district court decided in favor of Red Oak Junction, the present county seat. So, in April, 1865, the county business was transferred to the latter place. The court house was removed on the snow in January, 1866. Since then most of the other buildings have been taken to Red Oak Junction, until Frankfort has become a deserted village. Indeed, there are but four buildings remaining on the old town site. Scattered around are to be seen the ruins of its former greatness, in the shape of cellars and heaps of ashes. So in this new country often passes away the glory of many prosperous cities. It is to be hoped that the "county seat question" is forever settled.

COURT HOUSE.

The court house is a two-story frame building, situated on the north side of the park, or public square, in Red Oak Junction. The county officers occupy the lower story, and the upper is used as a court room and for public meetings. It has also been used by Professor White for his select school, and for purposes of religious meetings.

A MURDER CASE.

The only murder known to have been committed in the county took place in 1859. The unfortunate occurrence grew out of the circumstance of a man named A. J. Millslagle agreeing to buy a man's wife, and to pay him a certain pig as the price. It seems that the husband of the woman one day asked Millslagle what he would give him for his wife, as he seemed to be so particularly attached to her. The latter replied that he would give him that pig, pointing to a shoat in the yard. The husband agreed to the price. He then went to the neighbors and made complaint that Millslagle (who boarded in his family) had robbed him of his wife. Several of the neighbors, thinking the affair not very creditable, collected together and proceeded to the house where Millslagle was, for the purpose of driving him out of the neighborhood. They surrounded the house, and Millslagle, seizing his gun, shot one of the party, a young man named Stipe, killing him instantly. He was tried, found guilty of murder in the second degree, and sentenced to the penitentiary for twelve years. It is said that some of the best citizens in the county took part in the attempt to mob Millslagle, but afterward had occasion to regret their rashness. The whole affair, it is said, grew out of the whining representations of a worthless fellow, as a mere pretence to get rid of his wife.

REAL ESTATE MATTERS.

The first entry of land was made in Montgomery County by William Findley, May 31, 1853, that county being in the Council Bluffs Land District. The land is now all entered, except what is claimed and held by the Burlington & Missouri River Railroad Company, embracing about 64,000 acres, and some that is termed "swamp lands," yet held by the county. As in other counties in this part of the state, a very large proportion of the land belongs to non-residents, who entered it for speculative purposes. Much of this is now held on sale, through the local agents at Red Oak Junction.

CHURCHES, ETC.

The leading church organizations of the county are Methodist Episcopal, Baptist, and Christian, but other churches have members in different parts of the county.

Good substantial bridges cross the streams on all the principal roads in the county.

Montgomery County offers many inducements to the farmer and stock raiser, and persons wishing to find new localities to engage in agricultural pursuits may find in the fertile prairies and rich valleys of this county the sure road to wealth, or at least to a competency. As the resources of the soil are developed, manufactories, the mechanic arts, and other industrial pursuits, will necessarily follow.

COUNTY OFFICERS FOR 1875.

HENRY HOWARD, Auditor.	H. H. PALMER, Clerk of Courts.
W. P. WILEY, Treasurer,	WM. B. KENNEDY, Recorder.
J. T. MARTIN, Sheriff.	W. P. PATTISON, Supt. of Schools.

J. M. HEWITT, Chairman Board Supervisors.

RED OAK JUNCTION.

This town is situated on the Iowa Division of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad. Its situation in pleasant and picturesque. Part of the town plat rises up on the high ground, and commands a fine view of the valley each way with the river, and the groves skirting it on either side. The valley of the Nishnabotany at this point is about two miles wide, with the river running through the middle of it. It is about four miles west and a little south of the center of the county. It is situated on a grand slope to the east bank of the Nishnabotany River, with a stream called Red Oak Branch running directly through it. This branch is made up of springs on the town site, or in the vicinity. The stage road passes through it, from east to west. It is thirty miles from Quincy, the county seat of Adams County, and thirty miles from Glenwood, the county seat of Mills County. It was intended to be situated at the intersection of the main line of the B. & M. R. R. R., with the branch railroad from Nebraska City to Red Oak Junction. There are large bodies of timber near the place, on the Nishnabotany. The little creek which passes through it called Red Oak, is so named from the fact of a considerable grove of that species of timber being found on it. There are also several stone quarries within a mile of the town.

Years ago a railroad was proposed to run from Nebraska City up the valley of the Nishnabotany, to intersect the B. & M. R. R. R. at Red Oak Junction. Hence the proprietors, when they laid out the town, attached the word "Junction" to the name. This road has been built down the valley to Hanburg, in Fremont County, there connecting with the Council Bluffs & St. Joseph Railroad. It passes through one of the grandest and richest agricultural valleys in the world.

The original proprietors of Red Oak Junction were David Remick, A. Hebard, and Charles Hendrie.

The first house was built in 1857, by Joseph Zuber, and is the same now used as a hotel, and called the "Red Oak House."

The historian of the place in 1869 summed up its business as follows:

Red Oak Junction now contains five general stores, three family groceries, two drug stores, one hardware store, one stove and tinware store, one jeweler, two harness shops, one boot and shoe store, two meat markets, one steam saw and grist mill, one water flouring mill, two hotels, five attorneys, four physicians, one land agency firm, three blacksmith shops, two milliners, one dealer in agricultural implements, two brick makers, one printing office, one dealer in stationery, news, etc.

This county, and especially the vicinity of Red Oak Junction, is well supplied with good mills. Messrs. Stover and Lane are now erecting one of the best ever erected in the county. It is on the Nishnabotany, about a mile south of Red Oak Junction, the building is thirty by thirty feet, and four stories high. There are two run of burrs. All the machinery is new and of the best character. W. H. Kerrihard has also, within the limits of the town, a large steam flouring and saw-mill. Mr. Kerrihard is one of the enterprising business men of the place. He is just finishing a large two-story business house on the north side of the Public Square, the upper story of which he has fitted up for our friend Eaton, of the Montgomery County Express.

Speaking of the Montgomery County Express, reminds me of my duty to record the fact, that this is the first ever published in the county. It was commenced by that enterprising newspaper man, Webster Eaton, on the 21st of March, 1868. It bids fair to become one of the permanent institutions of Montgomery County. It will be remembered that Mr. Eaton also publishes the Adams County Gazette, Quincy.

The gentlemen engaged in a general mercantile business are C. H. Lane, H. Roberts, W. H. Kerrihard, D. W. Montgomery, and J. R. Cooley, all of whom are doing a substantial business. Mr. Roberts ships a considerable quantity of wool. Mr. Cooley has recently established himself in business here with a large stock, and seems to be a wide-a-wake, thorough business man. Mr. Montgomery is the senior partner of the hardware firm here of Montgomery & Stratton, which is the only house trading exclusively in that line in the place.

Among the prominent and substantial business men of the town, I also make mention of G. M. Holmes, druggist; Whittier & Strait, harness makers, and Joseph Barker, in the same line of business; Thomas J. Edwards, dealer in boots and shoes; L. M. Harding, stage agent; William Reevers, of the "Red Oak House;" G. J. Sheldon, of the "McMillen House," and Drs. M. N. McNaughton and R. D. Sperry, practicing physicians. Messrs. Simons & Beeson are leading attorneys, and well established in their profession. T. W. Crandall is an old citizen, and has large interests in and about the place, and is always ready to assist in promoting the good of the community. E. Piper is one of the industrious mechanics and builders. With such men as those mentioned, Red Oak Junction can hardly fail to become an important point, especially if she is so fortunate as to get a railroad, of which there is strong probability. Mr. Sheldon, of the "McMillen House," is a new man in the place, but manifests an enterprising spirit, having thoroughly refitted the house. I have heard it highly spoken of.

The town and a portion of the adjoining country constitutes an independent school district. It boasts a good public school, at present in charge of Miss Maggie Follmer, an experienced teacher.

The Masons have a flourishing lodge known as Red Oak Lodge, No. 162. They own a good hall, which they use for their meetings, and have it well and tastefully furnished. The lodge numbers over fifty members.

THE PRESENT CITY.

Such was the status of Red Oak Junction six or seven years ago, but from the description no one would recognize the present city, so rapid has been its growth, and so much has it improved in every respect. The business streets adjacent to the public square present substantial and elegant buildings, among which is the National Bank building, an unusually fine structure of brick and iron, and one which would do credit to almost any city. The place contains several very fine stores and residences, and the streets are improved and graded, with good sidewalks. The Methodists have in process of erection in the city one of the finest church edifices west of the Mississippi River.

NEWSPAPERS.

The newspapers now published at Red Oak Junction are the Red Oak Express, by J. Mayne & Co., and The Record, by J. S. Stidger.

The Express is a thirty-two-column weekly, Republican in politics. It was founded in 1867 by Webster Eaton, as mentioned above, who was succeeded by B. E. Simons in 1871. Eastman & Fisher succeeded Simons in 1872, and in November, 1872, it came into the hands of the present proprietors. It is ably conducted and well supported.

The Record is also well edited, and enjoying a good degree of prosperity.

CHURCHES AND MINISTERS.

Among the ministers who have labored in behalf of Methodism in this county, we mention Reverends Farlow, Howbut, Hughes, Rand, Shornburg, Coe, Howe, and A. J. Andres. There are several places of preaching in the county, and the church is represented as being in a prosperous condition. The church in Red Oak Junction has a thriving Sabbath School in connection with it.

The Baptist Church was organized in Red Oak Junction in 1864. There is a flourishing Sabbath School connected with the church. The Sabbath School was organized in April, 1868.

The Christian Church was organized in Red Oak Junction in April, 1868, with a membership of twenty-five. There is a Christian organization in the southwest part of the county. Their place of worship is at "Kenyon Grove," in Page County. There is also another organization of this church in Douglass Township, in the northeast portion of the county. There are numerous members of this church scattered throughout the county.

VALISKA.—This is a small village on Middle Nodaway, in the southeast part of the county. It is sixteen miles from Red Oak Junction, and in the midst of one of the best timbered portions of the county. It contains several stores, blacksmith shop, grocery, one drug store, one steam saw mill, one school house. It was laid out in 1857. There is a flouring mill on the Middle Nodaway in the vicinity. Valiska has a weekly paper, The Review, published by H. G. Thurman.

There is a town called Arlington laid out on West Nodaway, about eleven miles east of Red Oak Junction. There is a good water mill in the vicinity.

The post offices in the county are six in number, as follows: Red Oak Junction; Frankfort, the old county seat, about six miles northeast of Red Oak Junction; Sciolo, on the West Nodaway in the east part of the county; Valiska, on the Middle Nodaway, in the southeast part; Grant, in Douglass Township, in the northeast part; and Carr's Point, about eight miles southwest of Red Oak Junction, on Walnut Creek. Tals distribution of post offices affords convenient mail facilities to all the settled portions of the county.

PAGE COUNTY.

This county is situated very near the southwest corner of the state, being in the southern tier, and the second east of the Missouri River.

SURFACE, CONFIGURATION, AND RESOURCES.

The general surface of Page County is usually of an undulating character, well provided with a complete natural drainage by numerous streams and small watercourses, which are so distributed as to leave no marshes or swamp land. The prairie in its natural state was covered with a most luxuriant growth of grass, but is now divided into beautiful and well-cultivated farms, which annually repay the labors of the husbandman with generous harvests, which attest the fertility of the soil. The prairies present the same general characteristics common to other counties in southwest Iowa, the surface being gently rolling with a deep, rich, almost exhaustless soil, composed in part of the bluff formation, in part of the drift deposit, and in the valleys of a dark alluvial soil so well adapted to the production of corn. The valleys of the Nodaway and Nishnabotany are particularly fertile and beautiful, and present a pleasing diversity of landscape scenery, the prairie slopes being particularly adapted to the cereals, while the continued succession of finely cultivated fields, and neat, pleasant farm houses which dot its surface, present the appearance of an old-settled country. The Nodaway is about one hundred and fifty feet below the general prairie level. On either side there is usually a strip of alluvial bottom land from a half mile to a mile in width, covered with timber and grass. From these bottoms the prairies rise gradually, until they attain the general level above stated. Shallow, grassy ravines come down from the higher prairies at intervals, affording drainage and presenting a diversity which is agreeable to the eye.

The county is exceedingly well drained and watered by the East and West Nodaway, the East, Middle, and West Tarkio and their numerous tributaries, which all flow in a general southwest direction, and are in a great measure supplied by springs which afford water all the year. In the east half of the county, good well-water is obtained by digging from twenty to twenty-eight feet. On the high prairies in the west part of the county in many places it is necessary to dig from seventy to eighty feet, but in the bottoms usually about twenty feet. Well water is generally of excellent quality, while that from springs is not relied on for domestic uses, not being so pure and cool. The Nodaway affords water-power sufficient for machinery most of the year. Several small mills have also been erected on Middle Tarkio, but the supply of water is not sufficient only for a small portion of the time. Few counties in Iowa have streams of water more regularly distributed to all parts than this, and all affording an abundance for the wants of stock at all times.

The east part of Page County is abundantly supplied with timber, heavy bodies being found along the Nodaways, and extending eastward to the county line. The four east townships, comprising one-fourth of the county, have an abundance of good timber to supply the demands of at least one half the county. Along the other streams the groves are small, with the exception of a considerable body on East Nishnabotany, in the northwest corner township. The timber is principally red and burr oak, black hickory, shell-bark hickory, hackberry, linn, white elm, red elm, black walnut, cottonwood, soft maple, honey locust, black ash, white ash, box alder and mulberry. But little, if any, white oak is found in the county. Among shrubs that are common, may be mentioned sumach, black elder, hazel, and prickly ash, and there is one small, isolated patch of paw-paw on the Nodaway. Among the climbing plants may be mentioned the wild grape, sarsaparilla, five and three-leaf ivy, bitter-root, and wild hop.

Coal is found in several localities in the county, but the principal banks which are worked, are on the Nodaway. Several banks are worked about two and one-half miles south of Clarinda. The vein is about seventeen inches in thickness, and the coal is equal in quality to the bituminous coal found in the coal-bearing region of the Des Moines valley.

This is the same vein which is worked near Quincy, in Adams, and also appears in the northwest part of Taylor. The product of these banks is extensively used for fuel in Clarinda, and also for manufacturing purposes. The mining is done by drifting from the sides of the ravines.

There is no scarcity of stone of good quality for building purposes. Within three miles of Clarinda there is an abundant supply, and also at various points along the East and West Nodaway. A hard, blueish limestone also crops out at intervals along the East Tarkio, extending quite across the country from north to south. This is a good stone for walls and foundations, but is unfit for quicklime, and is said to resemble the rock which has been used in Davis County for the manufacture of hydraulic cement. It is easily quarried, as it makes its appearance above the level of the stream.

Good brick are manufactured near Clarinda, Amity, Hawleyville, and at other places in the county. With her fair supply of timber, coal, stone, rich soil, and other advantages, Page County has within her borders the requisites necessary to insure her future greatness.

EARLY HISTORY.

The first white man who made a settlement in Page County, was George W. Farrens, in the Spring of 1840. His brothers, Henry and David Farrens, also came the same season, but a little later. They were from Jackson county, Missouri, and were all at that time young men without families. They erected a cabin, and made improvements on what proved, after the survey of the lands, to be section 27, township 67, range 36, in Buchanan Township, being the southeast corner township of the county. It soon became the nucleus of a large settlement, and was known at that early day as the Three Forks Settlement, from the fact of its being near the junction of the East and West Nodaway, and also of Buchanan Creek and Nodaway. After the first year the brothers began to have other neighbors than the red men, for, in the Spring of 1841, George and David Brock settled in the same vicinity, and in 1842 Burkit Johnson, Thomas Johnson, William Campbell, and Robert Wilson, with their families, joined the new settlement. Robert Wilson pitched his tent a little to the west of the main settlement, near the place now known as Braddyville, on the Nodaway. During the same year, his brother, Pleasant Wilson, settled at the same place, where he died in 1844, being probably the first death of a white man in the county, except Lieut. Buchanan, who was not a resident. Robert Wilson, in 1847, sold out to his brother-in-law, Isaac Davison, and returned to Kentucky. In 1843, Joseph Thompson, Moses Thompson, and Larkin Thompson, three brothers, and Jesse Majors, settled a few miles southeast of Clarinda. Joseph and Moses Thompson died in the county, but Larkin Thompson and Jesse Majors are still living. Among the early settlers were Charles Gaston and —— Brown. Gaston was the son-in-law of Brown, and his first wife dying, he married another of Brown's daughters, who also died within a few months. These two sisters were among the first who died in the county, and the place where they were buried, on the banks of the Nodaway, is still pointed out by the old settlers. The first death of an adult resident of the county, however, was that of Mrs. Elizabeth Stafford, wife of Maj. Robert V. Stafford. She died November 9, 1844, and was buried in the first established graveyard. Several adults and children were afterwards interred, but it was finally abandoned as a burying place.

The particulars of the death of Lieut. Buchanan, before alluded to as the first within the limits of Page County, are as follows, as far as known: Some time about the year 1833, this officer of the United States Army, with a small detachment of troops, was passing across the territory of the Missouri River, and, while crossing the East Nodaway in his buggy, about a mile northeast of where Hawleyville now stands, was drowned. His body was recovered and buried on the east bank of the river, near the mouth of a small branch. A monument was erected over his grave, suitably inscribed, but was destroyed by the Indians. Some portions of this monument are in the possession of parties in the vicinity, and are preserved as relics. The place of burial is still pointed out by the citizens. In making the public survey of lands, a small tributary of East Nodaway, some twelve miles below was erroneously called Buchanan Creek—the surveyors not having definite information in regard to the locality where the unfortunate occurrence took place.

While on the subject of names, it may be well to mention the circumstance which is said to explain the meaning of the Indian name Nodaway. At an early day Dr. Luther Bent, who had a contract for supplying beef to the Indians about where Council Bluffs is now located, had an interpreter, to whom he noticed another Indian apply the term, or epitaph, not-a-way. The doctor asked the Indian what was meant by the word, and he replied that he was like a rattle-snake, vindictive, revengeful, and cunning. He then asked him if that would explain the origin of the name of the stream so-called. The Indian said it would—that once the borders of those streams had been infested by a great many rattle-snakes, and for that reason they had received the name, Nodaway.

All the early settlement seems to have been confined to the southeast part of the county, and was mostly within the limits of what is now known as Buchan Township. In the Summer of 1846 S. F. Snider settled near the center of the county, on Snake Creek, just above its junction with the East Tarkio. He removed to Montgomery County, but subsequently returned to Page, and was elected county judge in 1854. Among others who settled in various parts of the county prior to 1852, may be mentioned Alexander Dike and Dr. William Graves, who erected their cabins on the Nodaway, about nine miles north of Clarinda, in 1851, and Thomas P. Nixon, about six miles southeast of Clarinda, in 1850. Samuel Nixon, John Nixon, William Loy, and B. Herrill, also settled in the county prior to the year 1852. Among the first settlers west of the Nodaway were Isaiah Hurlbut and —— Lee, who settled south of Clarinda as early, at least, as 1849, and about the same time a settlement was made in the northwest corner township of the county, on the East Nishnabotany, by Antram Redman, —— Hadden, Doren Hunt and brothers. One of the prominent early settlers of the county was Claiborn McBee, who removed to California some years ago.

At the Presidential election of 1844 a poll was opened in the south part of what is now Page County, but was then considered a part of Andrew County, Missouri. A return of the poll-books was made to Savannah, Missouri, David Farrens being the person who made the return. This was the first election ever held within the limits of Page County, which was duly organized in the Fall of 1850, William L. Burge being the sheriff who officiated in the organization. It took place at Boulwar's Mill, this being the county seat. Dr. Alexander H. Farrens was the first county clerk, and Robert W. Stafford the first elected sheriff. Some of the early records of the county were destroyed by the burning of the building in which they were kept. These records embraced the proceedings of the first county courts. Up to 1854, however, the county business seems to have been transacted at Boulwar's Mills, William L. Burge being the first elected county judge. He was succeeded by Judge S. F. Snider, who caused the books and records to be transferred to the present county seat in that year. He erected the first building in Clarinda, in which county business was transacted, after which he resigned, and was succeeded by John Wilson, during whose official term a court house was erected—perhaps in 1856. In 1858 Judge Snider was again elected, and having removed the books and papers connected with his office to his store on the northwest corner of the square, they were destroyed with the building as above stated. Judge Snider subsequently removed to Kansas.

The first district court in Page County convened at the house of Phillip Boulwar, September 22, 1851, James Sloan presiding as judge. A. H. Farrens was Clerk; R. W. Stafford, Sheriff, and the court appointed Jacob Dawson, Prosecuting Attorney. The other attorneys present were George P. Stiles and A. C. Ford. About the only business which seems to have been transacted at this term was the admission of one Eberhand Frederick Gamuel, of the Kingdom of Wirtemburg, as a citizen of the United States, upon the testimony of G. W. Farrens and William Roach. The second term should have been held in April, 1852, but Judge Sloan had in the meantime resigned, leaving the Sixth Judicial District without a head. The records show that the clerk and sheriff were present, and that the clerk adjourned court until such time as might thereafter be fixed by the proper authority. On the 12th of July, 1852, Honorable Allen A. Bradford, having been appointed district judge by Governor Hempstead, appeared and held the second term of the district court in Page County. Jonathan Shepherd was appointed prosecuting attorney for the term. The attorneys enrolled were C. P. Brown, L. Lingenfelter, James M. Dews and B. Rector. Several cases were disposed of, mostly indictments for assault and battery. The grand jurors were: P. B. Johnson, Joshua Brown, James Murray, William Robbins, Thomas Nixon, Peter Baker, Hiram Beach, James Huggins, A. B. Quinby, Joel Davidson, Jesse Major, Eli Cummings, John Brock, and Henry O. Farrens. William Robbins was appointed foreman of this grand jury. At the September term of 1853, John Wilson and M. K. Skidmore, upon examination, were admitted to the bar. A large proportion of the business of this term seems to have been prosecutions for the unlawful sale of intoxicating liquors. All the courts up to the April term of 1854 were held at Boulwar's Mill. The attorneys who practiced in the district courts of this county, from its organization up to 1858, were as follows: L. Lingenfelter, Benjamin Rector, S. E. McCracken, J. M. Dews, John Wilson, J. L. Sharp, H. P. Bennett, D. H. Solomon, William Kelsey, E. H. Sears, C. E. Stone, Joseph Murphy, H. H. Harding, R. L. Dodge, J. W. Russell, J. Barwick, A. H. East, J. A. Hughes, W. S. Graff, William Herron, and John H. Ware.

William Robbins, whose name appears in the panel of first grand jurors, was also one of the early sheriffs of this county. He had a peculiarity in his method of electioneering which was somewhat amusing, if nothing more. He always went with a pair of saddlebags, in one end of which he carried a jug of whisky and in the other tobacco. When asked why he did this, he said: "I never want to leave a man worse than I find him; he has to throw his chew away to drink with me, and of course for the accommodation I must give him a chew of tobacco to make him whole." It is needless to add that he was a successful canvasser, and made hosts of friends.

Although from the record it seems that Clarinda became the county seat in 1854 there appears no record of the plat of the town until 1857, when Judge Snider caused the same to be put upon record in due form. There is every reason to believe, however, that Clarinda began to assume the importance due her as the chief town of the county as early as 1854. In the Spring of this year Conn & Camp opened the first general store, and the same year Gordon & Shambeaugh also engaged in the same business. In the Spring of 1855 Rogers & Hinchman brought on a large stock, and about the same time B. S. Poisley & Co. also appeared in the Clarinda market with a general assortment in the same line. The first drug store was opened in the Spring of 1856 by S. H. Kridelbaugh, M.D., who was also, perhaps, the first medical practitioner in the place. Among the first settlers of Clarinda were Thomas McKinnon and his three sons, S. Addison, Jefferson and Robert.

The first marriage which appears on record, after the organization of the county, is that of Henry Davidson and Rebecca Sebastian, November 17, 1852. The reader must not infer, however, that this was the first case of matrimony within the limits of the territory now embraced in Page County. More than one marriage had taken place while the south half of the county was under the jurisdiction of Missouri. The first regular physician who offered his services to the people of Page County was Doctor Alexander H. Farrens, who located in the Three Fork Settlement in 1849. He died a few years ago. In 1848 a small store was started by Brown & Hudson, at what was then known as Boulwar's Mill, two and a half miles south of Clarinda, on the Nodaway. This mill was the first in the county, and was erected by John Stonebreaker in 1846. The first orchard planted in Page County was on the farm of George W. Farrens, in the Spring of 1842. The trees were brought from Jackson County, Missouri. They are still bearing fruit. Another of the early orchards is on a farm in Buchanan Township, and was planted by Birkit Johnson in 1843. There is another small orchard in East River Township, three miles southeast of Clarinda, which is said to have been planted by a wandering Mormon, or by one Nelson Buckley, about the year 1842. The trees in all these old orchards are mostly seedlings, and are said to bear fruit every season.

COUNTY PATRIOTISM.

Page County furnished her proper proportion of brave and true men to assist in putting down the rebellion, and nobly did her part, both at home and in the field. One fact to her honor and credit, and which attests her patriotism, must not be omitted, and that is the fact that, under an offer made by the Governor during the rebellion, she received the banner for the largest amount of supplies, in proportion to population, furnished to the families of soldiers.

THE PRESS.

Being unable to secure the data for a complete history of the press of Page County, little more than the names of the papers now published and their editors can now be given. The leading Republican organ of the county is the Clarinda Herald, which is probably the oldest publication in the county, being established in 1862. It is owned and edited by Ralph Robinson, an experienced and successful journalist, under whose management it has a large circulation and an extending influence in Page and adjoining counties.

The Page County Democrat first made its appearance August 20, 1868, conducted editorially by J. Arick, who in November of the same year sold to N. C. Rideout, the present publisher, in whose hands it has become one of the most popular and influential Democratic papers in southwestern Iowa. It is a thirty-two column sheet, well edited; is a good advertising medium, and has also in connection a large and well equipped job office.

The Shenandoah Reporter made its appearance among the press of Iowa in August, 1871, with the names of Nicholson & Gaff at the head of its editorial column. In 1873 Nicholson retired and —— McCabe became senior editor and publisher, and at a still more recent date the establishment passed into the hands of G. W. Gunnison, Jr., a newspaper man of considerable experience, who is making it one of the best and most popular local papers in that section of the state.

COUNTY OFFICIALS, 1875.

WILLIAM M. ALEXANDER, Auditor.	JOSEPH E. HILL, Clerk of Courts.
HENRY LORANZ, Treasurer.	JAMES L. BROWN, Recorder.
ISAAC DAMGWOOD, Sheriff.	HUGH WOTEN, Supt. Common Schools.

JOHN X. GRIFFITH, Chairman of the Board of Supervisors.

CLARINDA,

The county seat of Page County, is pleasantly situated in the valley of West Nodaway, about six miles from the east line of the county. Although not on the high prairies, the grounds on which it is located are dry and undulating. Plenty of wood, coal and stone are convenient, and the situation is admirable for building up a thriving and prosperous place. The town plat originally embraced the northwest quarter of section 31, township 69, range 36, but several additions have been laid out so that the town now contains about 400 acres. Its present population is probably not less than 1,500.

The organized churches are the Methodist, Baptist, Universalist, Presbyterian, and United Presbyterian. The Baptists have a handsome brick church, while all the others have good frame buildings for public worship. The public school building is a large, handsome edifice, costing over $10,000, and capable of accommodating 500 pupils, and is situated in a beautiful rolling tract of land near the south side of the town. It is finished and furnished in the best style, having a large amount of philosophical apparatus, a fine collection, embracing about 1,400 geological specimens, physiological apparatus, including a manakin, skeleton, and numerous engravings, charts, and a good library. The town is handsomely laid out, with wide, well graded streets, and contains a number of good business blocks, most of which surround the large public square, and several fine residences. The place also contains some important manufactories, among which may be mentioned a woolen mill, plow factory, carriage and wagon shops, flouring and saw mills. Being situated in the center of a good agricultural district, at the terminus of the Brownville and Nodaway Valley Railroad, which renders it an important shipping point, and possessing a class of wide-awake, thoroughly enterprising business men, it has a flattering future.

The first sermon was preached in Clarinda in June, 1853, by Reverend S. Farlow. The first school was taught in the preacher's house by Mrs. Isabella Farlow, wife of the minister, in the Summer of 1853. Reverend S. Farlow and family were first to make a settlement on the town plat in April, 1853. The second inhabitant was Judge Snyder.

Doctor Daniel Farrens, who died in 1857, was the first physician in the county. Doctor J. L. Barrett was the first physician in Clarinda in 1855, and is still living in the city, noted, as he has ever been, for his wit and cheerfulness in talking and smiling away the "blues" and all sorts of despondency.

George Rible, one of the foremost and most active men of Clarinda, was one of the first settlers. He kept the first hotel.

The first church was built in 1858; the first school house in 1854.

SHENANDOAH

Is a thriving young town in the west part of the county, on the line of the Nebraska Branch of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad. It was laid out in 1870 by the Burlington & Missouri Railroad Company, the first house being built in the latter part of July of that year. The first merchant was W. E. Webster, the first physician B. M. Webster, while the first school was taught by Miss Eunice Barker, now Mrs. John Miller, and the first sermon preached in the railroad depot by Samuel Farlow.

Being situated in the valley of the Nishnabotany River, which is probably the richest, as well as one of the most beautiful in the state, and surrounded by an agricultural region which has no superior, and few equals in the West, it is necessarily an important shipping point. It has a good graded school, with a large brick school house, the best in the county, three churches—Methodist, Baptist, and Catholic, four dry goods stores, three grocery, two drug, two hardware, two furniture, one clothing, and one jewelry store, three livery stables, two banks, one hotel, two restaurants, two lumber yards, two elevators and grain warehouses, etc., etc. Its natural resources and advantages have attracted enterprising men of capital, in whose hands it is receiving that encouragement which argues well for the future, and promises that at no distant day to make it one of the important places in Iowa on western slope.

HAWLEYVILLE.—This was the first town laid out in the county, and is situated on the east side of East Nodaway River, about six miles east of Clarinda. Its original proprietor was Henry McAlpin. In 1850, a store was opened here by J. M. Hawley, being the only one of any importance at that time within the territory embraced in the four counties of Page, Taylor, Adams, and Montgomery. The country around this place is in a good state of cultivation.

AMITY.—This is a village within three miles of the south line of the county. The post office is known by the name of College Springs. A good educational institution is located here. The settlement commenced in the Spring of 1856, and the first settlers were Joseph Cornforth, J. P. Donaldson, O. R. Strong, B. F. Haskins, J. G. Laughlin, Elijah Gibbs, M. S. Marrow, Jabez Fickling, J. B. Laughlin, W. R. Laughlin, J. J. Laughlin, Aaron Dow, and W. J. Woods. The place was laid out by an association organized at Galesburg, Illinois, with a capital of $30,000, which was invested in government lands in Missouri and Iowa, for the benefit of a college.

HEPBURN.—This is a station on the Brownville & Nodaway Valley Railroad. It is a post office, and a shipping point for a considerable amount of produce.

ESSEX.—This is a station on the Nebraska City Branch of the C., B. & Q. Railroad in the northwest part of the county.

The other post offices are Bradlyville Center, Franklin Grove, Page City, Snow Hill, Tarkio, Union Grove, and Willsburg.

DAVIS COUNTY.

GENERAL DESCRIPTION.

Davis is the third county west of the Mississippi River, in the south tier. It embraces an area of 315,290 acres. It is watered by the Des Moines River, which passes through its northeast corner, and by several tributaries of that river, to-wit: Soap Lick, Salt and Chequest Creeks. Several other streams which flow into the Mississippi pass through the county, viz.: Fox River, North and South Wyacondah, and Fabius. These streams afford a plentiful supply of stock water to nearly all parts of the county. Along them, and upon the highlands adjoining are extensive groves of the finest timber, so distributed over the county as to be convenient to all parts. The "divides" between the streams are generally smooth prairies, sufficiently rolling for drainage.

PRODUCTS.

The county is one of the finest for agricultural and grazing purposes in the state. The reports of its Agricultural Society show that at its second annual fair, a premium was awarded for the production of 138 bushels of corn from a single acre, and at the third annual fair, for 213 bushels from a single acre. The average yield of wheat per acre is from fifteen to twenty bushels, but as high as forty bushels have been raised. Farming is profitable here, as improved agricultural implements are extensively used, and great care taken in the management of the soil, and the succession of the crops. Grain in large quantities is taken to the stations most convenient on the Keokuk & Des Moines Railroad. Rye, barley and oats are sure crops. The yield of oats is often from fifty to eighty bushels per acre. Buckwheat succeeds well, and will yield from fifteen to forty bushels per acre. Sorghum has been extensively raised and manufactured.

For grazing purposes this county is equal to any in the state. Hay, timothy and clover are the principal crops, but blue grass is a sure crop. The wild grasses on the prairies and along the water courses afford fine pasturage for stock running at large. The numerous splendid herds of cattle to be seen in all parts of the county attest the superior advantages of this county as a grazing country.

The county is well adapted to fruit raising, and many orchards are in bearing. Pears, cherries and grapes do well, and also the various kinds of small fruits, such as currants, gooseberries, raspberries, strawberries, etc. Among the wild fruits blackberries and plums are usually plenty. Around Bloomfield there are several vineyards which have proved successful. The Concord is the principal grape now cultivated, but the Clinton and some other varieties do well.

Considerable attention is now given to the cultivation of osage orange hedges. With proper care and attention there is no difficulty in raising a good hedge in five years, and many farmers are availing themselves of its advantages.

COAL, STONE, ETC.

Davis County contains large quantities of excellent coal, the veins worked being about four feet in thickness. It will probably rank among the best coal counties in the state. It also contains some fine stone quarries, from which excellent building stone nas been obtained. An excellent article of hydraulic cement has been manufactured from a bluish limestone found in this county. There is no difficulty in obtaining good well water in most parts of the county, by digging from twenty to thirty feet.

EARLY HISTORY.

The county was first settled by emigrants from Missouri, Kentucky, Indiana and Southern Illinois. Previous to the first of May, 1843, the territory embracing Davis County, was occupied by the Sac and Fox Indians. Up to this time, with a few exceptions, there were no white inhabitants. The exceptions were a few from Missouri and Kentucky along the southern border, on territory at that time claimed by the State of Missouri, and a few squatters on the extreme eastern portion of the county, on part of the first or "Black Hawk Purchase." As early as 1837, a number of persons had located along the southern border, and within the limits of the county. The same year James H. Jordan established a trading post near a village of the Sac and Fox Indians, on the Des Moines River, and in 1838, he permanently located in the county at the place subsequently known as Iowaville. Van Caldwell and a few others settled near the same place in 1839 and 1840. It was at this Indian village that the renowned chief, Black Hawk, spent the last days of his life. He died here on the 3d day of October, 1838, and was buried by his family and friends on what was known as the old council ground, at the upper end of a small prairie above Iowaville. The cabin in which he died and that of Mr. Jordan, stood only about ten rods apart. The remains of the chief were afterward stolen away by parties who took them to Alton. On complaint of his family they were subsequently recovered by Governor Lucas, and brought to Burlington, then the seat of territorial government. Black Hawk's sons consented that the remains might be left at the executive office in Burlington. The skeleton was finally placed in a museum there, and some years after, with many other valuable relics, was consumed by fire.

The Indian Chief Keokuk also had his residence in Davis County, about one mile down the river from that of Black Hawk.

In March, 1842, a post office was established in the county called Fox, which name it retained for a number of years, when it was changed to Stringtown. This post office was within the limits of the "Black Hawk purchase." Samuel A. Evans was the first post master. The first mail was carried by Colonel Stiles S. Carpenter, then of Van Buren County; but after making a few trips, Samuel Swearengen obtained a contract for carrying the mail weekly. The second post office established was at the house of Lloyd A. Nelson, and was established in 1844. It was called Lewiston, and Mr. Nelson was post master. At that time Colonel Carpenter had a "claim" two miles southeast of Lewiston, which he called "Prairie Springs." The county seat was not yet located, and a rivalry sprang up between the two places for the location of the county seat.

Prior to 1844, the county had no political organization of its own, but was attached to Van Buren County for civil purposes. On the 16th of February of this year, the Territorial Council enacted a law for a county organization from and after the 1st of March. The same act appointed Charles H. Price, of Van Buren County, Thomas Wright, of Henry County, and John Brown, of Lee County, Commissioners to locate the county seat.

At the time of the organization of the county, Colonel Stiles S. Carpenter held the office of Clerk of the District Court by appointment from Hon. Charles Mason, one of the judges of the territorial court. Colonel Carpenter was a leading and influential man in the early days of the county. He held the office of district clerk until after the adoption of the state constitution, when he declined a renomination, and was elected prosecuting attorney. He removed to Texas in 1857, where he died soon afterwards. He was a native of Vermont.

On the first Monday in April, 1844, the first county officers were elected, as follows: Samuel W. McAtee, Abram Weaver and William D. Evans, County Commissioners; Gabriel S. Lockman, Surveyor; Israel Kister, Recorder; Greenbury Willis, Assessor; Fortunatus C. Humble, Sheriff; Franklin Street, Commissioners' Clerk; Miles Tatlock, Judge of Probate; Calvin Taylor, Treasurer; William McCormick, Coroner; and George Titus, Sealer of Weights and Measures.

The County Commissioners at their first meeting determined the name of the county seat by lot. Mr. McAtee was in favor of the name "Jefferson;" Mr. Weaver preferred that of "Davis," and Mr. Evans suggested "Bloomfield." Each name was written on a slip of paper and placed in a hat. Mr. Street, the clerk, was directed to draw out one of the ballots, and the result decided the name of the county town to be Bloomfield.

The first district court was organized at Bloomfield September 23, 1844, Hon. Chas. Mason being Judge; Hon. L. D. Stockton, District Attorney; John Leffler, Deputy United States Marshal; Colonel Stiles S. Carpenter, Clerk, and Samuel S. Riggs, Sheriff. Twenty-four men were summoned to sit as a petit jury, but no grand jury was empanneled. Only one case was tried, and that an action of replevin.

The first marriage took place March 27, 1847, the parties being Thomas King and Harriet Douning. The marriage rite was performed by L. N. English, a justice of the peace.

The first law suit in the county was between Joseph Carter, as plaintiff, and Aaron Earnest, as defendant, for the price of a "claim."

COUNTY OFFICERS FOR 1875.

JOSEPH W. CLAYTON, Auditor.	AMBROSE H. HILL, Clerk of Courts.
HENRY NULTON, Treasurer.	WILLIAM VOTAW, Recorder.
JOHN MCKIBBIN, Sheriff.	ISRAEL F. JENKINS, Supt. Schools.

JESSE P. FORTUNE, Chairman of Board of Supervisors.

BOOMFIELD.

This thriving county town is located at the geographical center of the county, about nineteen miles due south of Ottumwa. It is in the midst of a fine agricultural district. It has excellent railroad advantages.

On the 26th of June, 1846, the land was entered by James H. Cowles, on which the Town of Bloomfield was laid out, he conveying the land to the county commissioners in their official capacity for that purpose. The town was laid out the same Summer, and the post office removed from Lewiston.

The first merchant was John Lucas. He came to the county in 1844, and purchased a claim adjoining the town plat. He erected his log cabin about a half a mile north of Bloomfield, and opened a stock of goods which he brought with him from Fountain County, Indiana, where he had previously been engaged in the mercantile business. In this cabin he remained with his family (some seven in number) and his stock of goods for several months, when he moved into town, having erected a frame building on the west side of the public square. During the same year Samuel Steele & Co., and Carpenter & Davis, commenced mercantile business in town. Steele & Co. built a long frame building on the north side of the square, and Carpenter put up a log cabin on the west side. The stores of Mr. Steele and Mr. Lucas were the only buildings in town except log cabins till 1849. In that year Captain Hosea B. Horn built the first frame dwelling house erected at the county seat.

In this connection we allude to some of the later merchants and business men of the place. A writer of the history of Bloomfield in 1868 says:

"As among the most substantial and enterprising business men of the place may be mentioned the following: In the line of dry goods and groceries, Calvin Taylor, Cook & Findley, and Duffield & Lovett. As druggists, S. H. and J. B. Glen, Findley and Duffield, and A. D. Gibbons, all stand deservedly high. J. W. Kittleman & Bro., and Kister & Cowan, are leading dealers in family groceries, H. Collins & Son in hardware, J. R. Sheaffer in jewelry, watches and clocks, and Burgess & Skidmore in boots and shoes, and Kittleman & Bro. also manufacture and deal in boots and shoes. General J. B. Weaver holds the office of assessor of internal revenue, and is one of the enterprising business men of the county. The bar of this county embraces some of the best legal talent of southern Iowa. S. T. Ballard, who has stood high here as a teacher, is now turning his attention to the law.

Among the most popular physicians is Dr. D. C. Greenleaf, who, by the way, once represented the county in the Legislature. Shadle & Grider have accomplished much for the place by adding to its hotels the comfortable looking Iowa House, of which we hear good report. The First National Bank of Bloomfield is one of the sound institutions of its kind. Among the enterprising artisans we mention Messrs. Head & Sayre, house, sign and portrait painters. Howard Willey deals extensively in fruit trees, and nursery stock generally.

An excellent steam flouring mill, with three run of stones, has just been erected about half a mile west of the town.

Bloomfield is in the midst of one of the finest agricultural districts of Davis County, and possesses the elements to make it one of the most thriving inland towns in Iowa. It is now improving more rapidly than ever before. Seven large brick business houses are to be erected the present season, some of which are now under way. A large number of new dwelling houses are also going up, several of which are to be quite costly. In fact, Bloomfield exhibits all the evidences of a prosperous and growing town.

F. C. Overton is the present mayor, with A. H. Hill as recorder. J. Boyer, Esq., is post master and express agent."

The business houses and newspapers of that time were summed up as follows:

The town has seven general stores, three drug stores, four family groceries, two hardware stores, two dealers in stoves and tinware, one in agricultural implements, two furniture stores, two merchant tailors, one gunsmith, one bakery, two wagon shops, three blacksmith shops, three boot and shoe establishments, one jeweler, three hotels, one artist, five milliners, three painters, eighteen carpenters, five plasterers, two livery stables, nine lawyers, four physicians, one dentist, four churches, two school houses, one printing office, and one national bank.

The churches are Methodist Episcopal, Baptist, O. S. Presbyterian, and Christian. They are all frame buildings. The public school houses are two-story brick buildings. It is in contemplation to erect a commodious edifice, suitable for the purposes of a graded shool. The Masons and Odd Fellows each have flourishing lodges; and also a Chapter of the former, and an Encampment of the latter.

The printing office is owned by E. T. White, Esq., the editor and proprietor of the Davis County Republican, a live newspaper, and one that is doing a good work in representing the interests of the community in which it is published. It should be the pride, as it is surely the interest of the people of Davis County to give it a generous support. From the same office is also issued the Union Guard, with H. H. Jones, Esq., as editor and publisher. It is a neat little twenty column sheet.

Since that date (1868) great improvements have been made, and the town wears an air of thrift and prosperity in its various departments of business. The population at the present time is 969.

The situation is a dry and rolling prairie, with plenty of timber within convenient distance. The nearest coal bank in operation is about eight miles distant, and about the same distance good building stone is obtained. The principal business houses of the place are located fronting a public park, which is enclosed and planted with forest trees, mostly maple. The trees are thrifty, and form a most delightful grove. The county, although able to establish banks and build railroads, has never yet felt rich enough to provide a court house. Her courts have heretofore been held in the different churches about town. The Board of Supervisors in 1868 took steps toward leasing or buying an upper story on the north side of the park for county purposes. In this hall courts are still held.

THE PRESS.

The Davis County Republican has already been referred to. It was established in 1863, by A. M. Karns, and has passed through three changes of proprietorship, E. T. White, as above stated, being editor and proprietor in 1868. We have not been able to obtain the dates of all the changes, or when each person who has been connected with the Republican from first to last began and retired; but the present proprietors are J. A. T. Hull and A. M. Karns. The Republican is the oldest paper in Davis County and has the largest circulation. It is one of the official papers of the county. J. H. T. Hull, editor; A. M. Karns, publisher.

The Bloomfield Democrat was established September 16, 1869, by T. O. Walker, its present editor and proprietor. It was enlarged to an eight column paper in 1870, and has a good patronage, being well conducted and one of the official organs of the county. It is the only Democratic paper published in Davis County.

The Odd Fellows' Banner, was established by J. B. King, October 17, 1874. It is a weekly issue, neutral in politics, and, as its name indicates, devoted to the interests and literature of Odd Fellowship. It has a present circulation of 6,000, and is rapidly increasing. The publisher contemplates soon putting in a power press with steam fixtures.

The Commonwealth, a Republican weekly, was established in 1873, by Moore & Van Benthusen, and is at present conducted by the same firm.

The Teacher at Work, is a monthly publication, edited by Rev. A. Axline, principal of the Normal and Scientific Institute. It is devoted to the normal department of common school education.

NORMAL AND SCIENTIFIC INSTITUTE.

This institution, located at Bloomfield, is an individual enterprise, and is under the management of Rev. A. Axline, with a board of trustees. The following are the members of the board: M. H. Jones, S. W. McAtee, Judge Trimble, J. B. Weaver, and J. W. Ellis.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

The schools of Bloomfield are on the graded plan, and it has been the purpose of the Board of Education to make them equal in every respect to the wants of the community, so far as a popular education is concerned, by supplying them with the best facilities for teaching and the best talent. To this end the district has made liberal appropriations. The new public school building, soon to be completed, will hardly have a superior anywhere in the state in point of architectural beauty and perfection of arrangements, and it will be an ornament to the city as well as a monument of the zeal and liberality of its builders in the cause of popular education.

CHURCHES.

Bloomfield has seven churches, viz.: two Christian, one Baptist, one Methodist Episcopal, one Congregational, one United Presbyterian, and one Universalist. These bodies have church edifices, and nearly all sustain regular preaching.

DRAKEVILLE.—This is a thriving incorporated town on the Chicago & Southwestern Railroad, about six miles northwest of Bloomfield. It has three churches—Methodist Episcopal, Christian and Protestant Methodist. It has also a weekly paper, The Sun, independent in politics, J. B. Moore, editor.

OTHER VILLAGES.

There are also the following villages and post offices in the county: Albany, Ash Grove, Belknap, Bush, Chequest, Floris, Monterey, Oak Springs, Pulaski, Savannah, Stiles, Troy and West Grove.

NORMAL SCHOOL.

The Troy Normal School is located in the village of Troy, Troy Township. It was established in 1856, and is a private institution. Its present condition is reported as prosperous. Prof. Hull, principal.

FLOYD COUNTY.

Floyd is the fourth county west of the Mississippi River, in the second tier from the north line of the state, and is therefore within the section usually denominated Northern Iowa. It is somewhat less than medium size in superficial area, containing 504 square miles, or about 322,560 acres. The congressional townships are 94, 95, 96, and the south half of 97 of ranges 15, 16, 17 and 18.

SURFACE FEATURES.

The principal features characteristic of the surface do not appertain to this county alone, but distinguish nearly the entire upper portion of the valley of the Cedar and its tributaries. The elevations and depressions in the face of the country are comparatively slight. The valleys of the streams are not very much lower than the adjacent uplands, although they are defined in many places by bluff lines or limestone ledges not high but distinct. At other points the valleys rise by gentle slopes until they blend almost imperceptibly with the general surface of the country. It is common to find the valley thus abruptly defined on one side, while upon the other the distinct boundary is absolutely wanting. A short distance above or below the same order will be observed, on one side a low ledge or bluff line, on the other a gently sloping surface, but upon opposite sides of the streams. Sometimes the ledges are wanting altogether and at some points, but less frequently, they are found upon both sides. The face of the country presents no very bold or striking features. The general surface is gently undulating, and the broad expanse of prairie often appears to be more nearly level than is really the case. East of Cedar River, groves of young oak and poplar, surrounded with tracts of brush land, are quite common. West of the Cedar the area between the valleys is almost uniformly "clear" prairie, that is, prairie unsprinkled with brush or trees.

The surface of the county lies at an average elevation of about five hundred feet above low water mark in the Mississippi River at McGregor, or nearly 1,200 feet above the level of the sea. It has a considerable inclination toward the southeast. From measurements taken in the different railroad surveys, it appears that the highest point in the line of the Illinois Central Railroad, near the county line between Charles City and Nashua, is 492 feet above the Mississippi at Dubuque, Nashua Station and Charles City Station, both situated in the valley of the Cedar, being respectively 383 and 427 feet above the same point. Marble Rock Station, in the valley of the Shellrock in the southwest part of the county, has an elevation of 440 feet. Floyd Station, upon the west side of the Cedar, and about on a level with the surrounding country, has an elevation of 515 feet, and the Village of Rock Grove, in the west part of the county, has an elevation of 540 feet. Passing northward from Rock Grove, the highest point before reaching Flood Creek, is 554 feet, while the water in Flood Creek, upon the same line, is 542 feet, and the highest point in the prairie between Flood Creek and Rock Creek, near the north line of the county, is 538 feet above low water at Dubuque. It therefore appears that the descent in the plane of the surface from the northwest to the southeast parts of the county is nearly one hundred and fifty feet. This may account for the singular uniformity in the direction of the streams that traverse its limits, and must also have considerable influence upon the surface drainage, where the undulations are so slight as they are here, in giving the soil the dry character free from surplus water, for which this region is noted.

GEOLOGY.

The character of the geological formation has no doubt also something to do with the peculiarity last mentioned. The drift formation which overlies this region, is thinner than in other sections of the state, but it displays upon the surface an unusual depth of finely pulverized earth. The clay and gravel portions of the drift are comparatively thin and do not approach near the surface. The earth is of sufficient depth to hold the proper amount of moisture and withstands drouht remarkably well, while surplus water flows off readily, or if too much penetrates the soil, it easily percolates through the thin gravel or clay to the fissures of the limestone rock beneath, reappearing in pure clear springs.

The rock formation is thus comparatively near the surface, but not near enough to injure or retard the productiveness of the soil, on the contrary it appears to promote it, owing to the peculiarity above mentioned. The rock is in part a nearly pure light gray limestone, which is quite brittle. Other portions contain considerable carbonate of magnesia, are of tougher texture and of yellowish gray color. Layers of both will frequently be found in the same quarry, sometimes mingled with sandy impurities. It is all classified by geologists with the Hamilton group of the Devonian period. It affords an abundance of excellent building stone and material for quicklime for all practical purposes.

DRAINAGE.

The principal streams passing through Floyd County are Cedar River, Little Cedar River, Shell Rock River and Flood Creek. The first four named flow almost parallel with each other from northwest to southeast, affording admirable drainage to every portion of the county. The largest is Cedar River, which is regarded, in size and importance, as the second of the interior rivers of Iowa. Here, it has an average width of about sixty yards, with continuous rapids, affording a succession of water power that must prove exceedingly valuable in the future. The source of this stream is nearly one hundred miles north, in Minnesota, and in a section of 65 miles in a direct line from Mary's Ford, in Mitchell County, to Cedar Falls in Black Hawk County, its total fall is no less than 371 feet. Along its banks in this county are numerous springs of pure and excellent cold water, flowing from the ledges of the rocks, through which the channel has worn its way. The Little Cedar, crossing the northeast part of the county, is also a stream of considerable importance, affording some good water power. The second stream in size and value to Floyd County, is Shell Rock River. It enters some four and a half miles south of the northwest corner, and passes out near the middle of the south line. It gives to the county a waterline of nearly thirty miles, with some of the finest mill sites to be found in Iowa. It is supplied by numerous springs, and the water is nearly always pure and clear. Lime Creek is a tributary of Shell Rock River, flowing in from the west. Further south is Coldwater Creek, flowing in on the same side. Flood Creek, which enters a the northwest corner of the county, and passes out some eight miles west of the south east corner, drains a large belt of beautiful territory between the Shell Rock and Cedar Rivers. All of the above named streams have numerous tributaries supplying water and drainage to every part. Pure well water is obtained easily by digging, say from fifteen to thirty feet, while springs abound in many places, especially along the principal streams.

The principal water courses have eroded their channels entirely through the drift and into the limestone strata, and run usually upon rock beds. To this cause and their rapid currents is owing their peculiar charms and beauty. The valleys in many places expand into tracts of considerable width.

TIMBER—BUILDING MATERIAL.

Extensive tracts of good timber are found along Cedar River. There are also important tracts on Little Cedar and Shellrock, and some upon nearly all the other streams. The county has a plentiful supply for all ordinary purposes. Since the advent of railroads pine lumber has been supplied so cheaply that it is used almost exclusively, in preference to native lumber, for building purposes and extensively for fencing. The cheapness and convenience with which coal can be obtained is also advantageous. These additional sources of supply of lumber and fuel will have the effect of maintaining the timbered area of the county undiminished—its natural growth being now nearly, if not quite, equal to the amount used.

Besides the inexhaustible quarries of building stone opened in various parts of he county, materials for the manufacture of brick are plenty, and many good buildings of this material are to be seen. Indeed, the facilities for procuring building material of all kinds are all that can be reasonably desired.

PRODUCTIONS.

The farming lands of this county are unsurpassed in beauty and fertility, yielding bountiful crops of all the cereals and grasses common to this latitude. The staple productions are wheat, corn, oats, and barley, the two former taking the lead in about equal ratio. Good tame meadows are cultivated, and stock raising is carried on extensively. Considerable attention is given to the subject of blooded stock, and there are several herds of thoroughbred cattle owned by successful amateur breeders.

Apples, plums, etc., are cultivated to some extent, and the various small fruits thrive abundantly.

CLIMATE.

The climate is exceedingly healthful. Miasmatic diseases are almost unknown, and those of pulmonary nature are not common. The plentiful supply of pure water, the steady and healthful breezes prevailing at all seasons, the rapid movement of the streams, and the entire freedom of the county from swamps, ponds, or stagnant water, are conditions rendering it among the most highly favored in a sanitary point of view.

RAILROADS.

Very few counties of Iowa have been more fortunate in securing railroad facilities. Two important roads are now completed across the county. The first is the McGregor & Sioux City Railroad, passing east and west, affording an outlet to the markets of the state. On this line four important stations have been established in Floyd County, viz: Charles City, Floyd, Rudd and Nora Springs. The other road is the Cedar Falls & Minnesota Railroad, operated by the Illinois Central, passing up Cedar Valley on the east side of the river, and crossing the first named road at Charles City. On this line are two important stations in the county, viz: Charles City and Floyd. The Burlington, Cedar Rapids & Minnesota Railroad traverses the valley of the Shellrock, with stations at Marble Rock, Rockford and Nora Springs.

At three different times the people of the county voted by large majorities to subscribe stock for the construction of certain proposed railroads. The first vote was taken in November, 1856, on the proposition to subscribe $100,000 to the McGregor, St. Peters & Missouri River Railroad, county bonds to be issued bearing ten per cent interest. Again, in 1857, it was proposed to subscribe $100.000 to the stock of the Chicago, Iowa & Nebraska Railroad. No bonds were ever issued in either case. In 1858, a vote was carried—533 against 175—in favor of subscribing $60,000 to the stock of the Cedar Falls & Minnesota Railroad Company. Under this vote, bonds to the amount of $5,000 were issued. All but $1,600 of these bonds were returned to the county and cancelled. And so Floyd County has narrowly escaped from the bond troubles which have afflicted some other counties, and at the same time has been fortunate enough to secure three good railroads.

EDUCATIONAL.

In the neighborhood of $50,000 a year, and frequently more, are expended in this county for the maintenance of public schools, furnishing school houses, and all incidentals included. The number of schools is nearly one hundred, and the value of school houses about $100,000. The permanent school fund of the county is $29,102.94. The school edifices of this county will compare favorably with those of any other county in the state.

AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY.

A County Agricultural Society was organized March 12, 1859, with Chester Butterfield as President; John Ball, Vice President; A. B. F. Hildreth, Secretary; and M. G. Cook, Treasurer. It held its first annual fair in the Fall of that year, and has held a fair each year since, except one. The society is now in a prosperous condition, being nearly out of debt, and owning fair grounds, embracing thirty acres, fitted up at a cost of about $6,000. The citizens of Charles City and vicinity donated twenty acres of the ground to the society, and the rest it purchased.

EARLY SETTLEMENT—ORGANIZATION.

The first settlement by any white man seems to have been made in Floyd County in the year 1850. In that year Joseph Kelley wandered up the valley of Cedar River in search of a location, and finally made selection of the site of an Indian village, where a band of Winnebagoes, under their chief White Cloud, had hitherto made their home. At that time the nearest white settlement was where Janesville is now located, thirty-five miles below, in Bremer County—a settlement then known as "Lower Big Woods." The heavy body of timber in the east part of Floyd County was designated as "Upper Big Woods." Having made his selection, Mr. Kelley repaired to the land office at Dubuque for the purpose of making his entries. "Why, man alive! do you know where this land is?" said the officer. "I believe I do," replied Mr. Kelley. "Well," said the officer, "it is worthless to you—it is clean out of the world!" "No matter—I will take it," exclaimed Mr. Kelley, and walked off with his receipts.

Not long after Mr. Kelley settled at the present site of Charles City, a settlement was commenced in the vicinity of Floyd—six miles further up the river. Among the first here were C. P. Burroughs and H. M. Brown. Joseph Hewett, who subsequently became one of the pioneers at Clear Lake, also made a short sojourn in Floyd County prior to 1851. Rufus Clarke was likewise one of the early settlers, but removed to Minnesota. Among other early settlers of Floyd and vicinity we mention the names of William Carl, James Tatum, Jefferson Mutchler, Humphrey Hogan, M. G. Cook, and L. G. and J. W. Burroughs.

The first marriage license was issued February 8, 1855, to Wesley S. Ames and Della Castleman. David Wiltse and O. P. Harwood were the first attorneys who located in the county

In August, 1854, a county organization was effected by the appointment of the following officers: John M. Hart, Judge; S. C. Goddard, Clerk; David Wiltse, Prosecuting Attorney; William Montgomery, Sheriff; and Corydon M. Burroughs, School Fund Commissioner.

In January, 1855, O. P. Howard was appointed agent of the county for the selection of its swamp land, but soon after resigned; and in July, George Wyatt was appointed in his place.

The county was originally divided into four civil townships, to-wit: Union, Rock, Grove, Floyd and St. Charles. At this time Cerro Gordo county was embraced as a part of Floyd, and in March, 1855, was made a separate township, for judicial and revenue purposes, and designated as Cerro Gordo Township. Floyd County is now divided into civil townships, as follows: St. Charles, Floyd, Rock Grove, Rockford, Ulster, Scott, Union, Pleasant Grove, Riverton, Niles, Cedar and Rudd.

COUNTY SEAT.

Like many other counties, Floyd has passed through its struggle in regard to the location of the county seat. At the time of the organization, St. Charles was made the county seat, but the question of removal soon began to be agitated, and, in March, 1855, a number of citizens petitioned the county judge to authorize a vote to be taken. This, however, he declined to do, and in September, 1856, he ordered that proposals be received for the erection, in the village of St. Charles, of a stone court house, to be 50x70 feet in size. This movement met with violent opposition, and in January, 1857, another petition was presented to the county judge, asking the question of removal to be submitted to a vote of the people, which, after a protracted hearing on both sides, he again declined to do. It was finally proposed to vote on the question of locating it at the geographical center of the county, and, on the 3d of March, 1858, the county judge issued his proclamation, authorizing a vote to be taken on the 5th of April. The result was 453 in favor of removal to the center, and 434 in favor of St. Charles. It was therefore declared that by the result of this vote, the county seat was legally located at the geographical center of the State. The actual removal was never accomplished.

The county business continued to be transacted at St. Charles, where a large, substantial, and well-finished stone court house was erected, and the county seat has long since ceased to be a bone of contention.

COUNTY OFFICERS FOR 1875.

CHARLES A. SLOCUM, Auditor. JACOB BAER, Recorder.
ELI BROWNELL, Treasurer. D. M. FERGUSON, Sheriff.
HARVEY S. KELLOGG, Clerk of Courts. Miss HELEN R. DUNCAN, Superintendent.
J. C. LOCKWOOD, Chairman Board of Supervisors.

CHARLES CITY.

In the Summer of 1853, Mr. Kelley caused fifty-five acres of his land to be surveyed into town lots, calling the village St. Charles, in honor of his eldest son. In the early part of 1854, one log cabin was erected, and in the Fall of that year Mr. Kelley finished the building of a saw mill. The name of the town was subsequently changed to Charles City, but the township in which it is located, still retains the name of St. Charles.

In 1855, or about that time, Jarvis Rattan built a steam saw-mill at St. Charles, and lumber being more easily obtained, quite a number of buildings were erected in the latter place. About the same time seven capitalists from Rockford, Illinois, bought of Mr. Kelley, and other parties, the land adjoining the original town plat of St. Charles, and, forming themselves into a company, laid off a large additional tract into town lots. The following were the names of the persons composing the Town Company thus organized: Joseph Kelley, Duncan Ferguson, R. M. Waller, Milo Gilbert, William Hulin, Luke Joslin, R. M. Brantingham, and Jackson Spriggs. Since that time the town has enjoyed a steady and substantial growth, sufficiently rapid, but without outstripping the demands of the country.

It is situated on both sides of Cedar River, the greater portion, however, being on the east side. Beautiful groves surround the place on nearly all sides, and these, together with the river and its varied scenery, render the location one of great beauty. A substantial bridge crosses the river, connecting the two parts of the city. It is somewhat irregularly laid off, to conform to the course of the river, but has dry, handsome streets, which are kept in remarkably good order. The business portion of the town is chiefly on the east side of the river, from the bridge outward. The business buildings are, many of them, substantial stone blocks, of three stories. There are also some good buildings of brick. The handsome residences with which the place abounds, make a very fine appearance. The following is a summary of the leading branches of business: Five general stores, six grocery stores, three hardware stores, five boot and shoe establishments, two harness shops, three drug stores, two jewelry stores, four millinery stores, four sewing machine agencies, two clothing stores, two music stores, one tobacco and cigar dealer, three hotels, three printing offices, three banking houses, one of them a national bank, one brewery, one foundry, three planing mills, three agricultural machinery dealers, six blacksmith shops, four wagon shops, two feed stores, three meat markets, two barber shops, three paint shops, two bakeries, one photograph gallery, two merchant tailors, two cooper shops, ten lawyers, seven real estate agencies, two insurance agencies, five physicians, one abstract office, etc.

Both railroads have good depot buildings at the east side of the city. Upon the depot grounds of the Illinois Central there are three grain elevators and some half dozen warehouses. At that of the McGregor and Sioux City Road (more commonly known as the Iowa and Dakota Division of the Milwaukee and St. Paul, the operating company,) there are two elevators and about as many warehouses as at the former. At these elevators and warehouses a vast amount of grain is shipped, and Charles City is one of the best grain markets in Northern Iowa. There are two flouring mills, one propelled by water, the other by steam. The water power at Charles City is one of the best in the state, the fall being unusually great, and the banks upon either side, as well as the bed of the stream, are limestone rock, affording an excellent foundation for the dam. As yet it is improved only to a small extent of its capacity.

In the Spring of 1869 Charles City was incorporated by the election of a Mayor, Recorder, and five Trustees, Milo Gilbert becoming the Mayor. The present Mayor is W. D. Buich, Recorder, A. W. French.

The city is an independent school district, and maintains its public schools in a most liberal manner. The citizens take especial pride in their schools, and, indeed, they would be an honor to any city in the state. There are two excellent school houses, one on each side of the river. The East Side school house was finished in 1867, is built of stone, 50x60 feet, and three stories high, including the basement. It is surmounted by a handsome tower, and has six large school rooms, besides one recitation room. The entire building is neatly finished, and furnished with the best single and double seats and desks. The cost was about $14,000. Since its completion it has been thoroughly remodeled internally and refurnished, and is now furnished with all the modern improvements. The West Side building is also of stone, three stories high, and contains six good school rooms. It is similar in construction to that on the East Side, and equally well furnished. The schools are in charge of a principal, and are graded in four departments, high school, grammar school, intermediate and primary. The high school department is conducted solely upon the East Side.

The leading religious denominations are represented by the following organizations: Congregational, Baptist, Methodist Episcopal, German Methodist, Christian, Catholic, Lutheran, and Adventist. All except the last have houses or churches for religious worship. Those of the Methodist Episcopal and Christian denominations are fine stone edifices, and the others are frame. The Methodist Episcopal church, just finished, at a cost of $14,855, is a large and handsome building. The Catholics have the foundation laid for a superb edifice of very large dimensions to be constructed of stone. It will be completed next year.

THE PRESS.

The first newspaper issued in the county was called the St. Charles Republican Intelligencer, the initial number making its appearance July 31st, 1856. Its enterprising editors and proprietors were A. B. F. Hildreth and D. D. W. Carver. So great was the anxiety to secure the first copy which came from the press that it was sold to the highest bidder for $20—Ferguson & Eastman, then bankers and real estate dealers at St. Charles, being the lucky purchasers. It was at first issued as a twenty-eight column sheet, but within a year was enlarged to thirty-six columns. Sometime after the paper was started, Mr. Carver retired, after which Mr. Hildreth continued the publication alone. In January, 1862, the name was changed to Hildreth's Charles City Intelligencer. The first word in the title was subsequently dropped. About five years ago Mr. Hildreth sold the paper to Dyke and Rowell, Mr. Leonard purchased Mr. Rowell's interest and the firm became Dyke & Leonard, and subsequently Dyke Bros., who sold to Owen Bros., and they to Charles A. Slocum, the present proprietor, early in the year 1875. It is a large folio sheet, issued weekly, Republican in politics, and is one of the leading newspapers in Northern Iowa.

On the 20th of November, 1868, the first number of a new paper called the Floyd County Advocate, was issued at Charles City by Valentine Balluff. It is a thirty-two column sheet, issued weekly, still owned and edited by its founder, and has a deservedly prosperous and increasing patronage. It was started by using "patents," but these have been discarded and the paper is now printed altogether at the home office. For six months in the year 1869 it was published semi-weekly.

The Western Patriarch, an eight column to the page folio sheet, issued weekly by John Beardsley, is devoted to the interests of Odd Fellowship, and is the leading exponent of that fraternity in Iowa, with a subscription list of nearly 3,000.

FLOYD.—In July, 1855, the Town of Floyd was laid out by James Griffith and Henry C. Tatum. The first bridge in the county over Cedar River was erected at this point, but was carried away by the flood in the Summer of 1858. The town is handsomely located on the east bank of Cedar River, six miles above Charles City. The Illinois Central Railroad depot is upon the east side of the river, and is easily accessible by means of a substantial bridge. The depot of the Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad is some distance south of the town. The town has the advantages of an excellent water power upon which is erected one of the best flouring mills along the upper Cedar. It has considerable local trade and quite a number of good business houses. The independent district of Floyd has a fine stone graded school edifice, erected at a cost of $10,000. An abundance of good timber is convenient, and an excellent farming country surrounds the place on all sides. With these and other advantages, it will make a point of considerable importance. It has also the advantages of excellent stone quarries.

ROCKFORD.—This is one of the prettiest towns in this part of Iowa. It is situated on the west bank of Shell Rock river, at the junction of Lime Creek. The town was laid out in June, 1856, by several gentlemen from Rockford, Illinois. George Wyatt, acting as their agent, selected the location, and there is surely no more delightful site for a town in Floyd County. There is an abundance of limestone, timber, and clay for brick. The Shell Rock here affords excellent water power, which has been improved by the erection of a good flouring mill. A man named Brenton was the first settler in this part of the county. The town never had a log house in it. This town is an important station on the Burlington, Cedar Rapids & Minnesota Railroad. Since the completion of this railroad it has built up rapidly and is now second only to Charles City in population. It is an excellent market and shipping point and has a large number of prosperous mercantile houses. Churches and schools are well maintained. A large, handsome stone edifice is provided for the latter. The Review, a handsome folio sheet of eight columns to the page, is published here by Mr. Robinson.

NORA SPRINGS.—This place is in the west part of the county, in a grove, on the east bank of Shell Rock River, in the Township of Rock Grove. A portion of the town was laid out many years ago, and was a place of considerable trade, owing in part to the fact that a fine flouring mill is situated here and a good bridge over the river. A railroad addition was subsequently laid out. The new portion of the town has rapidly improved, and a large number of residences and business houses have been erected. Both the Milwaukee & St. Paul and B. C. R. & M. roads have stations here, and the town enjoys a good local trade. The Floyd County Press is an independent Republican newspaper published here by H. H. Colt. It was established in 1872, and is a quarto sheet of five columns to the page.

RUDD.—This is a pretty little village and station on the Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad, between Floyd and Nora Springs, a little east of Floyd Creek. It is on a beautiful, rich prairie, surrounded by a country of great fertility, with a plentiful supply of timber on Flood Creek near. The town plat embraces fifty acres, and was laid out in October, 1869, by J. Swartwood.

MARBLE ROCK.—This is a village near Shell Rock river, in the southwest part of the county, and a station on the Burlington, Chicago & Milwaukee Railroad. It has considerable local trade and is a good shipping point. It also has a good flouring mill.

ROCK GROVE is a small village on the east side of Shell Rock River, two or three miles below Nora Springs. Watertown and Ulster are post offices.

CLARKE COUNTY.

Clarke is the seventh county west of the Mississippi River in the second tier of counties from the south line of the state. It is one of the smaller counties of Iowa, being 24 miles in length, by 18 in breadth. It contains an area of twelve congressional townships or about 276,480 acres.

PHYSICAL FEATURES AND RESOURCES.

The surface of the county derives its character chiefly from the great water-shed which enters its borders a little south of the northwest corner, and passes out about five miles north of the southeast corner. This elevated tract or plateau of prairie impresses its features distinctly upon the topography of the adjacent territory for some distance, as there are leading from it on either side broad prairie tracts resembling it very closely in appearance and character. Thus the general surface is high, rolling, or undulating prairie, with a soil of a dark sandy loam, yielding in profusion all kinds of cereals usually grown in this latitude. It has no large streams, but is well watered by several small creeks, among which are Charlton River, Whitebreast, Bee, and Long Creeks in the central and southern portion, and South Squaw, North Squaw, Brush, and Otter Creeks in the east and northeast portions. On the west and northwest are Seven Mile Creek and South River. These streams afford at all seasons of the year, abundant water for stock, but none of them are reliable for mill purposes. There are innumerable smaller streams interspersed throughout the county, having their sources in springs. The water courses of about two-thirds of its surface are tributary to the Mississippi. The remainder flow to the Missouri. Good well water is usually obtained at a depth of about 20 feet.

Timber is found along nearly all the principal streams. The best timbered portions of the county are the southeast and southwest townships, but all the townships have more or less timber. Troy, Madison, Washington, and Ward, the four northwest townships, have the least timber. The timber is oak, walnut, hickory, soft maple, elm, linn, hackberry, and cottonwood. Hazel prevails in many places, and as usual, where it grows the soil is especially adapted to wheat. The timber is of fair quality, and although not abundant, there is a sufficient quantity for ordinary purposes. Since the completion of the railroad large quantities of pine lumber have been used here for fencing and building purposes. Farmers are paying some attention to the planting of groves, especially on the larger prairies.

The surface of the county consists of a deep deposit of drift. The upper coal measure formation alone underlies the drift throughout its entire extent according to the Geology of Iowa. By the same authority it is stated that the exposures are almost wholly limestone strata of that formation, very uniform in their general character, consisting of gray limestone, with occasional layers or partings of calcareous clay. Almost the only exposure of strata are in the valleys of Squaw, Otter, White Breast, and Long Creeks, the other water courses being mere depressions in the drift. Thus sufficient quantities of good building stone and quick lime are obtained, but the discovery of coal must await the process of deep mining. Good materials for the manufacture of brick are obtained near Osceola and at other places, and good sand for building purposes is found in nearly all the streams.

The principal grain productions of Clarke County are corn, oats, wheat and barley, corn taking the lead. Indeed it is the great staple of this section of Iowa. The tame grasses, especially clover and timothy succeed admirably, and tame meadows and pastures are extensively cultivated. Fruit culture is practiced to quite an important extent. This section is found to be well adapted to the propagation of apples, pears, plums, cherries, grapes, and nearly all the small fruits. Many good orchards are in bearing.

The farmers of this county have resorted to hedging on quite an extensive scale, and the Osage orange proves thrifty, hardy, and admirably adapted for that purpose in this latitude, making, with a few years growth, an excellent and permanent fence, which serves the additional purpose of a good protection against the prevalent winds of this region.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

The first settlement of whites within the limits of Clarke County was made at a point about six miles south of Osceola by John Conyer and John and James Longley, in the year 1846. These men had started with their families in the great Mormon exodus of that year, from Nauvoo, Illinois, to cross the plains. They had, with other "Latter Day Saints," intended to spend the Winter at Council Bluffs, preparatory to a general march in the Spring of the next year. By some chance or accident they became separated from their companions and lost their way. They wandered over the prairie several days, after which they determined to pitch their tents at the place mentioned and await the coming of more genial weather. They erected cabins and gave to the place the name of 'Lost Camp," by which it was known to all the early inhabitants in this part of the State. In the Spring they found many of their brethren but a few miles from them. They remained several years, and cultivated large farms, but in time fell in with the tide moving westward and gave place to others. No other white settlers came to the county until 1850, when Bernard Arnold, James J. Arnold, J. Ellis Robert Jamison, A. Collier, John Shearer, William Overton, and several others with their families, settled in the southern portion of the county. Shortly after a colony from Van Buren County laid off the town of Hopeville, in the southwest part of the county, and opened a large farm in the vicinity. This may be considered the first permanent settlement, and from that time forward the population has steadily increased.

The first marriage in the county was that of Dickenson Webster, Jr., and Louisa J. Perry, March 18, 1852. The first marriage license appears under date of April 29, 1851, as follows: "Certificate of marriage license - Emanuel J. Henkle and Ann K. Snow, on testimony of John C. Smith, stating that the parties were of condition to marry, and one dollar being in the treasury."

ORGANIZATION.

Clarke County was organized in pursuance of an act of the Legislature passed at the session of 1850-51. The first election was held in August 1851, at the residence of William Vest, about three miles southwest of the present county seat. Thirty-five votes were polled, and the following were the officers elected: John A. Lindsley, County Judge; Alonzo R. Williams, Clerk; G. W. Glenn, Treasurer and Recorder; Ivison Ellis Sheriff; Robert Jamison, School Fund Commissioner; Jerry Jenks, Surveyor; and Dickinson Webster, Sr., John Shearer, and Bernard Arnold, County Commissioners.

The county commissioners exercised the functions of their office only until the new code took effect, after which their office perished, and their powers passed to the county judges. They held their first meeting August 21, 1851, at the house of John Conyer.

COUNTY SEAT.

By the legislative act for the organization of the county, Beverly Searcy, James Graham and Samuel D. Bishop were appointed to locate the seat of justice for Clarke County. They made selection of the present site of Osceola, being the southwest quarter of section 17, township 72, north of range 25 west. They made their report on the 16th day of August, 1851. The land on which the county seat was located had been entered at the land office in Charlton on the 14th day of March, 1851, by George W. How. The county commissioners purchased of Mr. How and Seth Richards the above tract, stipulating to pay one hundred dollars therefor in a year, the owners executing their bond for a deed upon the payment. The deed was duly executed on the 20th of July, 1852. Other additions to the town were subsequently laid out, so that it now contains some 250 acres.

INCIDENTS, ETC.

At the first meeting of the commissioners in August, 1851, Jerry Jenks, the County Surveyor, was directed to appear at the county seat on the 29th day of August, 1851, on official business, provided with instruments to survey the town. The survey of the town was accordingly commenced at that time, and in due time completed. The first sale of lots in Osceola was held on the 13th of October, 1851, at which time 85 were disposed of at an average price of $22 each. Among the first purchasers of lots were B. Arnold, Beverly Searcy, W. Buchanan, G. W. Conger, G. W. How, J. Lewis, J. C. Smith, A. Williams, L. Gardner, D. Webster, I. Ellis, and How & Richards.

In January, 1852, the treasurer reported the amount of taxes collected as being $74.25, including state, county and school tax! The amount of delinquent tax reported was $45.05.

The first step toward the erection of a court house was taken in 1852, at which time it was ordered that a court house be built in Osceola, to be completed in eighteen months, and to be enclosed, floors laid, and one room above finished, on or before the 1st of December, 1852. The court house was not built, however, until 1854, when it was erected by P. J. Goss, for the sum of $900. It was a frame building, and is still in use as a county building. The citizens of the county will vote on the question of the erection of a new court house at the ensuing election, October, 1875.

The first term of district court in the county was held in 1853, by Judge J. S. Townsend.

In all the early records the name of the county is spelled C-l-a-r-k, without the final e, and that of the town O-c-e-o-l-a without the intermediate s.

In January, 1852, a township was organized embracing the entire county, the election to be held at Osceola on the first Monday in April, 1852. In July, 1852, Doyle Township in the southwest part of the county, was organized into an election precinct, and David Newton, Vincent Davis, and Jacob Keplinger were appointed judges of an election to be held at Hopeville on the first Monday in August, 1852. In February 1854, several townships were organized, and others, from time to time, making the present civil townships in the county as follows: Liberty, Fremont, Washington, Madison, Troy, Ward, Osceola, Jackson, Franklin, Green Bay, Knox, and Doyle—making twelve in all, conforming in their boundaries to the Congressional townships.

At the general election, August 2, 1852, the vote cast in the county was eighty-one. The political status of the county at that time was Democratic. B. Hewn, Democratic candidate for Congress had sixteen majority over his Whig opponent, Phillip Viele.

Upon the breaking out of the rebellion in 1861, Clarke County manifested a patriotic disposition to assist in upholding the national flag, and maintained that determination both at home and abroad throughout the struggle. The total number of men furnished by the county is reported at 432, leaving an excess over the quotas of 1861 and 1862 of 170. About three-eighths of all persons liable to military duty in the county enlisted in the army.

RAILROADS.

The Burlington & Missouri River Railroad traverses the county from east to west near the center, passing through Osceola, and having stations also at Woodburn, near the eastern border of the county, and at Murray, near the western border. This railroad affords excellent means of communication with the rest of the world, as well as ample facilities for exporting the surplus products of the county and importing its supplies of merchandise, lumber, coal, and other commodities. Since the completion of this road, or, it may be said, ever since its completion became a certainty, additional impetus has been given to the growth and development of the county, its wealth has been greatly increased, and new life and enterprise have been imparted to every branch of business. This era of progress has in no wise fallen off, but is at present as active as ever, maintained by the productiveness of the soil, healthful climate and exhaustless resources, and the energy and intelligence of its people.

POOR FARM.

The excellent farm owned and maintained by the county for the maintenance of those people who are dependent upon public aid for their support, is situated about three miles northeast of Osceola. It was purchased in January, 1875, and consists of two hundred acres. About $2,000 have been expended in improvements since its purchase. W. D. Short is overseer of the poor.

AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY.

The Clarke County Farmers' and Mechanics' Agricultural Society was organized in 1873, with John McDonough, President; George W. Fouch, Vice-President; E. F. Riley, Secretary; and George M. Cowles, Treasurer. It now owns excellent grounds of twenty acres, provided with good buildings, wells, a half-mile trotting course. The grounds and improvements are valued at about $4,000, and the affairs of the society are in a prosperous condition.

The county, although small in size as compared with Iowa counties in general, maintains upwards of eighty public schools, provided with school houses valued at about $60,000. These schools are maintained at an annual cost averaging about $30,000.

COUNTY OFFICERS FOR 1875.

PHILIP L. FOWLER, Auditor. J. M. LINDER, Treasurer.
JOHN H. JAMISON, Clerk of the Courts. JOSEPH N. BALLOU, Sheriff.
A. C. JOHNSON, Recorder. ARTHUR P. JENKS, School Superintendent
JAMES ELLIOT, Surveyor. AARON HARLAN, Coroner.
JACOB PROUDFOOT, J. STEPHENSON, and JOHN MCDONOUGH, Board of Supervisors

OSCEOLA.

The facts in relation to the location and platting of this town have already been given as a part of the history of the county.

The first house in Osceola was built by G. W. Howe, of hewed logs, and was occupied by him as a store room. The second and third were dwelling houses, and were erected by John Shearer and Israel Miller. John Shearer had, for some months prior to the erection of Howe's store room, lived with his family on the town site in a rail pen covered with straw. The first marriage in the Town of Osceola was at the residence of John Shearer, between David A. Waynich and Martha E. Shearer, September

2, 1852. The first birth in the town was that of Florence A. Lampson, daughter of M. R. Lampson, and the first death that of Mary Hurst.

An addition of sixty-six acres was laid out on the west side of the original town plat in August, 1856, by Dickinson Webster, which is known as West Osceola. The addition known as North Osceola was platted July 28, 1856, by Messrs. Howe and Richards, and comprises twenty acres. Several other additions have been made since. The entire plat of the town lies on a broad high tract of fine prairie. Its streets are wide and handsome. The rows of trees with which they are lined lend them a very pleasant appearance. In the center of the plat there is a large, handsome public square, and surrounding it are the principal business houses.

Osceola was incorporated as a city of the second class December 24, 1866. The present council consists of W. M. Wilson, Mayor; F. M. Kyte, Recorder; and W. H. Thompson, G. W. Clapp, William Chaney, H. E. Mintonye, and W. G. Agnew, Trustees.

BUSINESS IMPORTANCE.

This town is an important shipping point for the grain and live stock of a wide extent of fertile and well improved country, for which it affords an excellent market, the nearest important towns being from twenty-five to thirty miles distant. This broad territory also contributes to its extensive mercantile trade. It has many good stores and shops, representing all the principal branches of trade. The first banking house was established in the Fall of 1868 by H. C. Sigler, and in January, 1871, it became the First National Bank of Osceola, with H. C. Sigler, president, and William Christy, cashier. The present officers are, John E. Chaney, president, and W. G. Kennedy, cashier. The Osceola Bank is a private bank owned by George H. Cowles. It was established in 1869.

The Osceola Woolen Mills were built in 1863 by Messrs. Gross and Smith. In 1868 Mr. Smith disposed of his interest to H. F. Gross, the present proprietor of the entire property, which is valued at $12,000.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Osceola has a magnificent public school building, which was erected in 1868 at a cost of $23,000. Its dimensions are 60x80 feet, three stories high. The walls are constructed of stone and brick, and the building is finished in modern architectural style and furnished in an excellent manner. It is proposed to build next year an addition at a cost of $8,000. The schools are under the independent district organization, and are presided over by competent teachers.

CHURCHES.

The Methodist Episcopal, Presbyterian, Protestant Methodist, Baptist, Christian, and Advent religious denominations have good church edifices, ranging in value from $2,000 to $7,000. The two Methodist societies also have parsonages.

NEWSPAPERS.

The newspapers of Osceola are The Sentinel, the Beacon, and the New Era. The Sentinel was founded in 1858 as the Osceola Courier by G. S. Pike and T. R. Oldham, and by them sold to J. H. Caverly who named it the Union Sentinel October 17, 1862. In May, 1867, J. B. Dague purchased the office, and afterwards associated with himself Mr. J. C. Stockton. They changed the name to the Clarke County Sentinel. In October, 1868, M. A. Thompson succeeded Mr. Stockton, and sold in April, 1870, to R. A. Dague. The Dague Bros. changed the name to the Osceola Sentinel May 9, 1872. J. B. Dague sold to H. C. Ayres, Dague & Ayres sold to S. L. and J. C Hunter. Hunter Bros. sold in December, 1873, to J. J. Sliadman, and in June, 1875, S. M. Leach purchased a half interest. It is now published by Steadman & Leach. It is Republican in politics, published weekly, and has an extensive and profitable patronage.

The Osceola Beacon was established by Ayers & Miller and issued its first number January 1, 1874. It started out as an independent paper and supported the anti-monopoly ticket in 1874. It is now regarded as the organ of the Democratic party. Since February 18, 1875, it has been owned and edited by H. C. Ayres, the senior member of the former firm. Its circulation and patronage has steadily increased ever since it was started, and its prospects are excellent. It is issued weekly.

The New Era was started June 25, 1874, by its present editor and proprietor, J. M. Estes. It is issued weekly.

OTHER TOWNS.

WOODBURN is a lively little village and station on the B. & M railroad ten miles east of Osceola, and enjoys considerable mercantile prosperity. It is also a good shipping point.

MURRAY, ten miles west of Osceola, is also a promising village and station on the same line of railroad.

The other villages in the county are Hopville, Liberty, Smyrna, Green Bay, Lacelle, and Prairie Grove.

FREMONT COUNTY.

This county is in the southwest corner of the state, and has an area of 528 square miles, or 337,920 acres.

PHYSICAL FEATURES.

The following description of surface features of Fremont County is drawn chiefly from the Geology of Iowa of 1870:

The greater part of the country is drained by the Nishnabotany and its branches, the Missouri River itself draining the remainder. The last named drainage consists of ravines and small creeks which reach the great flood-plain through the bluffs that border the flood-plain throughout the whole extent. All these creeks and ravines pour their waters out upon the flood plain, and none of them reach the river except by percolation through the earth, for they sink away and become lost soon after leaving the bluffs, although water may remain running in their beds.

Among the bluffs during the whole year the great flood-plain denominated the Missouri River bottom, along the entire west side of the county, varies much in width; at its narrowest point is about three miles wide, and at the widest nearly nine miles. The bluffs which border this broad flood-plain form the most conspicuous feature of the surface. They reach a height of from 150 to nearly 300 feet from the level of the flood-plain. Although they are in most places composed almost entirely of that fine homogeneous material designated as bluff deposit, they are nearly as steep and abrupt as the rocky bluffs of the Mississippi Valley. In many cases the bluffs of the Missouri River Valley are so steep that they appear almost perpendicular, but this is far from being the case, appearances of this kind always being deceptive. The steepest fronts average less than an angle of forty-five degrees, and the boldest and most precipitous proved to have an angle of only fifty degrees. Some of the ravines which open into the flood-plain through these bluffs are deep, wild gorges, but they are usually short and end abruptly, by slopes so steep that they can be climbed only with difficulty.

Proceeding inland from the border of the valley the surface quickly becomes much less broken, although the material that constitutes the ground for a great depth is the same. These more level inland surfaces are prairies which present much the same general appearance that prairie surfaces do elsewhere, the peculiarities of the deposit being more especially shown where the surface is considerably broken.

Coming to the valleys of the East and West Nishnabotany, which unite near the center of the county, we find none of the bold, precipitous bluffs already described, although they have eroded their valleys out of the same deposit. On the contrary, their valley sides are of moderate height, and slope gently from the high general surface to the lowlands that border the streams. These lowlands average about a mile in width, and are formed by the same natural causes as the flood-plain of the great river, but are quite different in some respects. They slope very gently and uniformly from the valley side to the stream. The undulating slope of the valley sides to the higher surface being so gentle, the valley is broad and shallow, averaging from three to four miles in width. Thus, although the scenery is lacking in boldness, the portion of the county traversed by these streams is one of delightful and quiet beauty.

The usual narrow belt of wood land skirts the banks of these streams and those of their larger branches. That part of the county lying east of the West Nishnabotany is, with these exceptions, all prairie; but the part lying west of that river is well supplied with timber for fuel, fencing and common timber. There are some bodies of timber on the Missouri bottom, adjacent to the river, but the most generally timbered region is among and adjacent to the bluffs, where the broken nature of the surface served as some protection against fire. Besides the tracts which were timbered when the country was first occupied by the whites, a dense growth of young trees of all the indigenous species have since rapidly sprung up and encroached upon the prairies in many places. The county possesses quite enough wood land for ordinary use.

That peculiar limestone deposit, known under the name of the bluff deposit, occupies almost the entire surface of the county, constituting all its soil, except that of its flood-pains, and enters largely into the composition of the latter, including the Missouri bottom. This remarkable deposit gives character to the entire surface of the county and furnishes a soil of inexhaustible fertility. Indeed, it is confidently asserted that no country in the world possesses a soil of greater fertility. None of the soil may properly be called drift soil, as the drift begins to descend under the bluff deposit, immediately west of the great water-shed, and here it is seen only at a few points, where it has been bared by the action of the streams.

Some strata of the upper coal measures are exposed near the base of the bluffs in several places, especially in the northwestern quarter of the county. They consist mostly of courses of limestone, alternating with clayey and marley shales—a ten-inch vein of impure coal. These exposures are chiefly valuable for the limestone which they contain, which makes an excellent article of quicklime. Much of it is also suitable for ordinary building purposes and for dressing into caps and sills. Very good brick is made from material found in the base of the bluff deposit where it joins the drift.

Good water power is afforded by the Nishnabotany and its two branches and Walnut Creek, which afford frequent mill sites.

HISTORICAL.

The first settlements were made in this county as early as 1840. Among the first who came prior to 1842, were James McKissick, Cornelius McKissick, Daniel McKissick, Augustus Borcher, Thomas Farmer, David M. English, Job Matthews, John E. Scott, T. L. Buckham, William Lovelady, Daniel Huntsucker, and Isaac Huntsucker. They all settled in the south part of the county, at McKissick's and Pleasant Groves. The next settlement was made northwest of where the town of Sidney now stands, at what is known as Lacy's Grove. Among those who settled at an early day, though probably not so early as some mentioned above, were John Gordon, James Applegate, Dr. David Lincoln, Stephen T. Cromwell, Milton Richards, George Lacy, J. J. Singleton, Thomas Greenwood, A. M Hitchcock, and John Leaky.

About ten miles of the southern portion of the county was once under the jurisdiction of Holt County, Missouri, until the boundary question was settled between the two States. That part of old Holt County south of the state line, adjoining Fremont, is now known as Atchison County, Missouri. The north boundary of what was known as the "Platte Purchase," and which gave to the State of Missouri some four or five of her finest northwest counties, extended about ten miles into the territory afterwards conceded to Iowa. The jurisdiction of Holt County was extended to this boundary line, and thus, at that time, included the strip of territory in question. The purchase was made of the Pottawattamie Indians, who were removed to Pottawattamie County, Iowa, as is described in the history of that county, some time before any settlements were made by white men within the limits of Fremont County. This reservation, at that time, extended southward to the north line of the purchase, but soon after the settlement of the county began they relinquished all their lands in Iowa and repaired to Kansas. Major Stephen Cooper, who lived near the present Town of Bartlett, once represented Holt County in the Missouri Legislature. Mr. Hitchcock, above mentioned, kept a hotel about a mile and a half southeast of the place where Sidney was afterwards located. His building stood on the line, partly in what was then claimed as Missouri territory and partly on lands then belonging to the Pottawattamie Indians. Some men in the south part of Fremont County lived in two states and three counties without changing their residences, the States of Missouri and Iowa, and the counties of Holt, Atchison and Fremont.

ORGANIZATION.

Fremont County was organized in 1850-51. Thomas Greenwood was the first County Judge, A. H. Argyle, first Treasurer and Recorder, and J. S. Jones, Prosecuting Attorney. W. L. Burge acted as Prosecuting Attorney, by appointment, before Mr. Jones.

The first district court was held in 1850 by Judge M. McKay at the house of A. H. Argyle, near McKissick's Grove, where there was once a village called Austin. Milton Richards was the first Clerk of the District Court. The following persons composed the Grand Jury: C. C. Fugate, D. McKissick, Jno. Cooper, Robert Watkins, Eli Sinsher, Abel Roberts, David Markwood, Beverly Blair, Jerebe Stone, Jonathan Bridges, Anthony Burns, G. A. W. Belcher, David Jones, Sr., John Leeka, Henry Holloway, John Lambert, John Beeler, and Elias Findley. The last named served as foreman. Several of the above still remain citizens of the county.

James P. Burns appears upon the records of this court as the first applicant for divorce.

AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY.

An agricultural society was organized in 1868, with H. J. Heaton as President; J. A. Bodenhamer as Secretary. It held its first annual fair in the Fall of 1868.

FRUITS AND HEDGES.

There are some bearing orchards, and apples of an excellent quality have been produced, also cherries, and all the small fruits common in this latitude. There is no difficulty in raising grapes in any quantity, and of almost any variety. The whole "Missouri Slope" is renowned for its abundance of wild grapes. They are found in great profusion in all the groves along the streams. Wild raspberries, strawberries, and plums, are also abundant. Peaches have not been successful.

In this county, as well as generally in this part of the state, great interest is taken in the cultivation of hedges. They have proven a complete success. A large number of hedges in the vicinity of Tabor, as well as in other parts of the county, are now proof against all kind of stock. They also add vastly to the beauty of the prairie portions of the county. There are a number of fine growing hedges in the vicinity of Sidney.

TABOR COLONY AND COLLEGE.

Tabor College is situated at the Village of Tabor on the north line of Fremont County. In 1848, some families from Oberlin, Ohio, settled on the Missouri River, about five miles above the present site of Nebraska City, with the purpose of founding a college upon the same principle as the one at Oberlin. This was at a time when no other college was planned within many hundred miles. The sentiments of the new colony made them an unpopular people. Many of them were natives of New England. They were Congregationalists, and anti-slavery men. Settling near the border of a slave state, intense prejudice arose, which culminated in the burning of their school house. High water on the Missouri, which spread over its bottom lands in the Spring of 1851, led to the selection of the present location on the dividing ridge between the Missouri and Nishnabotany Rivers. It was incorporated, but the Board of Trustees did not deem it wise to open a school until 1857. Since that time about 1,300 students have received instruction, many of whom have gone out as teachers in the common schools of Iowa, Nebraska, Missouri, and Kansas. The institution was placed legally on a college basis July 25, 1866.

For several years the college has numbered in the different departments from 176 to 246 students during the year.

The college has three buildings erected at a cost of $24,000; a chapel 66x32 feet; the other 60x40 feet, three stories, and a music hall 20x28 feet, two stories; an endowment of $50,000, and eighty-nine acres of land.

The founder of the Tabor Colony (Rev. John Todd) deeded to the college, lands valued at $3,800, and besides, about $5,000—being one-half his property. The citizens of Tabor pledged about $31,000 more. At a meeting of the citizens of Tabor, called to consider the question of raising funds for a new building, and for endowment, the founder of the Colony said: "I have felt, ever since I came into the West, that I was making property for this one object, to build up an institution where the young people who should be educated, should go out into the world as Christians, and I will now give from my capital all that can be spared from my business, and carry that forward successfully, and I am willing to leave it to others to say how much that shall be. I will devote my income to the college; and, if necessary to its success, I will put in every dollar I have, and begin anew." In all, the people of Tabor and vicinity have given for buildings, endowment, and in cash, over $41,000.

A valuable geological cabinet is connected with the institution. Specimens have been collected for it in New England, and in Ceylon, and India. A good library is also established in the college. The course of study is equal to that of eastern colleges. It is intended to surround this institution with all the appliances of a first-class college.

RAILROADS.

One of the important railroads in the county is the Kansas City, St. Joseph, and Council Bluffs, following the Missouri River through the county, and passing through East Nebraska City and Hamburg. The connections from St. Louis to Sioux City are as follows: The "Missouri Pacific," from St. Louis to Weston; the "Missouri Valley," from Weston to St. Joseph; the "Council Bluffs and St. Joseph," from St. Joseph to Council Bluffs, and the "Sioux City Branch of the Union Pacific," from Council Bluffs to Sioux City.

On the line of the Council Bluffs and St. Joseph Railroad there are several stations in Fremont County, at each of which the railroad company have provided good depot houses, cattle enclosures, and other conveniences for shipping. At Hamburg they have erected a brick engine or round house. The present structure is of sufficient capacity to hold five engines, and can be enlarged by attaching additional sections as they may be needed.

The other road now completed through Fremont County is the Nebraska City Branch of the Chicago, Burlington, and Quincy Railroad, (formerly Burlington and Missouri River) connecting with the main line at Red Oak Junction. The traveler can now step on the cars at Red Oak Junction, glide down the Valley of the Nishnabotany to Hamburg; there change cars, and pass up the Missouri Valley via Council Bluffs to Sioux City, and in the excursion feast his eyes upon some of the finest scenery to be found in the West.

Another road is also in contemplation, known as the "Iowa and Missouri State Line Railroad." If this is built, and its friends are quite confident that it will be, it is also expected to form a junction with the Council Bluffs and St. Joseph Railroad at Hamburg. So it will be seen, that Fremont County is not likely to remain without adequate railroad facilities.

COUNTY OFFICERS FOR 1875.

JOHN GRISWOLD, Auditor.	JOHN B. GRAY, Recorder.
H. RUSSELL LAIRD, Clerk of Courts.	WM. W. MORGAN, Sheriff.
JAMES A. GRAY, Treasurer.	C. W. GOULD, Supt. of Schools.

HENRY BOWEN, Chairman of the Board of Supervisors.

SIDNEY.

This is the county seat, and is located near the center of the county. The land was entered by Judge Greenwood, who caused the same to be surveyed off into town lots. It is about three miles west of the Nishnabotany River, on a high, well drained prairie, commanding a delightful view of the valley and adjacent country for many miles.

William Dewey was employed to survey the town, in 1851, and J. J. Singleton was appointed agent to sell the lots. He also sold the first goods in Sidney, in 1851. Stephen T. Cromwell bought the first lot and built the first hotel. The building stands on the west side of the public square. The first dwelling house was erected by J. H. Cowles, in August, 1852. He, together with Augustus Borcher, A. L. Holden, A. A. Bradford, L. Lingenfelter and J. C. Campbell, were among the first settlers of the place. The first child born in the town was a daughter of J. H. Cowles, and in honor of the town, was christened Sidney. The first death which occurred was that of a young man named Lockwood, who died of consumption in 1854.

COURT HOUSE.

The best building in Sidney is the court house, which was completed in 1860, at a cost of about $40,000. To Col. E. S. Hedges, at that time county judge, belongs the honor of providing for Fremont County this noble public edifice. The style of architecture is of the Elizabethan order. The structure is two stories in height, and of commodious proportions. It is surmounted by a heavy brick tower, and roofed with tin. The court room in the second story is handsomely finished, and all the offices and apartments are tastefully painted and frescoed. There are three large and substantially built vaults, entirely fire and burglar proof. Altogether, the building is one of the finest in Western Iowa, and is an ornament to the town, as well as a credit to the county. It was mainly erected with the proceeds of the sales of swamp lands.

In November, 1863, this building met with a most unfortunate disaster. About 9 o'clock in the evening, when all seemed to be quiet, the citizens of Sidney were startled by a deep, heavy sound. On looking in the direction of the court house, they beheld volumes of flame and smoke issuing from the windows. It was soon ascertained that a heavy charge of powder had been ignited within the building. All the windows and doors were blown out, and the entire upper floor and roof lifted up, and thrown out of place. The walls were shattered in several places, and it is feared the building has sustained permanent injury, as some of the fissures seem to be increasing in size. The county has incurred heavy expense in repair of damages. A short time prior to this occurrence one of the merchants of the place had stolen from his store two and a half kegs of powder, which, it is supposed, was used for the above purpose. Who committed the deed, or the motive prompting it, have never yet been brought to light.

CHURCHES.

The religious denominations who have organizations in Sidney, are the M. E. Church, Baptist, Christian, Presbyterian, and Episcopal. All these societies have flourishing Sabbath Schools under their supervision. The Methodists and Baptists each have a fine brick building for public worship. The Christians have a commodious frame church.

The Sidney Union.—This enterprising weekly newspaper was established in 1863, by L. J. Easton. It is Republican in politics. The Union is the only paper published at the county seat of Fremont County, and is the official paper of the county. Its circulation has been during the last two years, and is at present, a little over one thousand. C. W. Murphy, editor and proprietor.

HAMBURG.

This thriving and prosperous town is situated on the west side of the Nishnabotany River, about three miles above its confluence with the Missouri, and ten miles from Sidney. It is near the southwest corner of Fremont County, where the Nishnabotany with its beautiful valley, breaks through the long line of bluffs that extend irregularly above and below. Nature has lavished upon this locality many of her grandest and most beautiful touches. Immediately west of the town, rises a bluff, or ridge, from the summit of which one may look over many miles of the surrounding country. It towers up nearly 300 feet above the plateau upon which the town is built, and from the top, breaks off so abruptly on either side, as to almost make one dizzy to look below either way. Up a narrow pathway, where only a footman can climb, one may ascend to a point commanding a view of portions of the States of Iowa, Missouri, Nebraska and Kansas.—From this elevation, looking to the east and south, we behold the broad Missouri with its island groves, its border forests of cottonwood, with the intervening miles of alluvial bottom prairie; and beyond all, the swelling slopes and fields of Nebraska. Down through the maize fields and the native meadows, like a silver thread, winds a brook known as Willow Creek, the waters of which flow from springs reaching up along the base of the bluffs some ten miles. Appearing as a mere pathway in the grass, and stretching its long line up parallel with the river, we may faintly see what that moving train in the distance proves to be the track of the Council Bluffs & St. Joseph Railroad. But the majestic steamer still carries a portion of the trade of the upper country, for occasionally may be seen some proud craft in the distance, slowly plowing its pathway through the waters. As it moves upward on its course, we may catch glimpses of it through the cottonwood groves, and watch its curling wreaths of smoke as it "rounds to" to drop a portion of its burden at Sidney Landing and Nebraska City.

But we must look in another direction. Down from the northwest, meandering through a valley as fertile as any on the globe, comes the Nishnabotany River to empty its tribute, three miles below, into the more turbid waters we have traveled on their journey more than a thousand miles from the northwest. How many hundred years ago this beautiful little river began to cut its way through these bluffs can not now be told, nor why it was. Perhaps it was, that a city in the after ages might rise here. Beyond this valley, with its green lining of trees, and looking over the bustling little city of Hamburg, to the east and north, we behold fine cultivated farms.

Twenty-eight years ago, a young German named Augustus Borcher, wandering from his native Fatherland, cast his lot here, in what was then an uncultivated wilderness, to trade with the Indians the remnant of a small stock of goods. In 1857 he conceived and consummated the project of locating a town at this spot, and not forgetting the fame of his native Hamburg on the Elbe, he gave that name to his newly founded city on the Missouri. Hamburg has now a population of 3,053.

Jacob McKissick was the first merchant in Hamburg, and built the first business house in 1858.

E. W. Allen, in 1868, erected at this place one of the finest flouring mills in the West. The building is 48 by 52 feet, and four stories high. The foundation is built of brick, and the balance frame. It has a 48 horse engine, with three sets of burrs—all the machinery being new and of the latest and best patterns. It stands at the southwest part of the town on the site of a mill burned for Mr. Allen a year or two before. He is deserving of credit for his enterprise.

The first large brick business block was erected by M. Heilman & Co., and C. S. Rider & Co., in 1868. The fine building of Sipple & Co., containing the Masonic Hall, was erected shortly after.

PROGRESS.

Hamburg was originally laid out in 1857. Since then various additions have been made to the city as are respectively called Nuckolls's Addition, H. W. Phelps' Addition, Railroad Addition, and East Hamburg. The town was incorporated April 1, 1867. It now covers 560 acres of land, situated in sections 21, 22, 27 and 28, in township 67, north of range 42 west.

The first railroad, the Council Bluffs and St. Joseph, was completed and opened to Hamburg December 30, 1867. It is now merged in the Kansas City, St. Joseph and Council Bluffs Railroad, one of the most important north and south roads in the country. The Nebraska City Branch of the Burlington and Missouri River Railroad was completed to Hamburg in 1870, and here makes a junction with the former road.

Since the construction of the railroads the town has had a sure, steady and prosperous growth. It is the natural depot for the productions of one of the finest agricultural regions on the continent, the surrounding country being exceedingly fertile, and abounding in timber of the most useful kinds. The town is admirably situated, being at the junction of the rich valley of the Nishnabotany with that of the Missouri. There is not in Iowa a more beautiful or convenient town site.

Main street, the principal business street, is a mile and three-fourths in length, perfectly straight, and one hundred feet wide. The whole town is regularly laid out, with streets and alleys running at right angles. Situated at the junction of two important railroads, it has superior advantages as a shipping point. The price of wood per cord is $3.50, and coal is readily and cheaply obtained from the Iowa, Missouri and Kansas mines, over the competing lines of railroad.

BUSINESS.

The principal branches of business of Hamburg may be summed up as follows: Two steam flouring mills, two steam elevators, two machine shops and foundries, two wagon shops, five blacksmith shops, one pottery, large brewery and malt house, two dealers in agricultural implements, two hardware stores, three furniture stores, one chair factory, two clothing stores, three drug stores, two book stores, two banks, one notion store, four dry goods stores, six grocery stores, three hotels, two boot and shoe stores, eight restaurants, one marble shop, two harness shops, two livery and sale stables, one Democratic and one Republican newspaper, two jewelry stores, three bakeries, three meat markets, nine lawyers, five doctors, three real estate dealers, four brick yards, two barbers, four millinery establishments, four carpenters and contractors, one art gallery, one dentist, one pork and packing house, two insurance agents, three sewing machine agencies, and offices of the Western Union Telegraph Company, and of the United States and American Express Companies.

GRADED SCHOOLS.

The graded system has been adopted in the public schools of the city, the divisions being into five departments, under one principal or superintendent, and managed by a board of education. The schools are well conducted and in a prosperous condition.

Arrangements are being made for the establishment also of a private or parochial school, under the management of the Sisters of the Catholic Church.

CHURCHES.

Hamburg has six churches, viz: Presbyterian, two Methodist Episcopal, Catholic, Baptist, and Christian. All have brick houses of worship, except the latter, which owns a good wooden building.

NEWSPAPERS.

The newspapers published at Hamburg are as follows:

The Hamburg Democrat, published by W. A. Fulmer.

The Fremont Times, established by Eaton Brothers in 1866; now edited and published by W. W. Copeland.

The Pastoral Visitor, edited by George W. Robey.

CITY OFFICERS.

The first mayor of the city was R. K. Crandall. The officers for 1875 are the following: Mayor, W. A. Stow; Recorder, J. M. Stauffer; Treasurer, W. N. Smith; Attorney, J. W. Dalbey; Marshal, J. L. Small.

City Council—W. W. Smith, J. M. Alexander, S. M. Hewitt, William Kelly, and Samuel Jacobs.

The other towns, villages and post offices in the county are Bartlett, Deer Creek, Eastport, Farragut, High Creek, McPaul, Percival, Plum Hollow, Riverton, Tabor, and Vaughan.

DES MOINES COUNTY.

Des Moines County is on the Mississippi River, in the second tier from the Missouri State line. It contains a superficial area of about four hundred and seventy-five square miles.

PHYSICAL FEATURES.

Besides the Mississippi, which bounds it on the east, and Skunk River on the south, there are numerous streams coursing their way through the county. The largest of these is Flint Creek, which, with its tributaries, traverses the whole extent from northwest to southeast. Some of the streams afford good water power for machinery. The surface is nearly equally divided into prairie and timber land. The timber upon the uplands consists chiefly of beech and white oak, hickory, elm, linn and cherry. On the bottom lands along the streams, is found a heavy growth of black and white walnut, shellbark hickory, burr-oak, sugar-maple, elm, ash, cottonwood, sycamore, hackberry, honey-locust and buckeye. On Flint Creek there are large bodies of excellent timber.

The county is well supplied with building material, as the bluffs along all the water courses furnish good building stone, which is easily quarried. Sand and clay, suitable for brick, are also abundant, and accessible in all parts of the county.

Along the Mississippi River, from the mouth of Flint Creek to the north line of the county, there are alluvial bottom lands, varying in width from one to six miles. The lower end of this belt is heavily timbered, and the northern portion mostly prairie, except a narrow belt along the river. Narrow belts of bottom land extend along Skunk River and Flint Creek, which are heavily timbered. In some places these bottoms are subject to occasional inundation, but they are mostly above high water mark.

This is one of the best agricultural counties in the state. The soil on the prairies is unsurpassed in fertility, while that of much of the timber land is scarcely inferior to it. This county is especially noted for its fine orchards and vineyards. Large quantities of fruits are now shipped from this county every year to other parts of the state.

HISTORICAL.

The first settlement of the county was made at Burlington and in that vicinity. In the Fall of 1832, Daniel Tothero came with his family and settled on the prairie about three miles from the Mississippi River. About the same time, Samuel White with his family erected his cabin near the river, at what is known as the upper bluff, within the limits of the present City of Burlington. This was before the extinction of the Indian title, as that did not take place until June 1, 1833, when the government acquired the territory under what was known as the "Black Hawk Purchase." There was then a government military post at Rock Island, and some dragoons came down from that place during the next winter and drove Tothero and White over the river, burning their cabins. White remained in Illinois until the first of the following June, when the Indians surrendered possession of the "Black Hawk Purchase," and on that very day was on the ground and built his second cabin. This cabin stood on what is now Front Street, between Court and High Streets, in the City of Burlington. Soon after Mr. White's return, his brother-in-law, Mr. Doolittle, joined him, and in 1834 they laid out the original town, naming it Burlington from the town of that name in Vermont. The name was given at the request of John Gray, a Vermonter, and a friend of the proprietors. Thus White and Doolittle became the Romulus and Remus of one of the leading cities of Iowa.

During the year 1833, there was considerable settlement made in the county, and soon a mill was erected by Mr. Dounell on Flint Creek, three miles from Burlington. In 1837, Major McKell erected a sawmill in the town.

In June, 1834, Congress passed an act attaching the Black Hawk Purchase to the Territory of Michigan for temporary government. In September of the same year the Legislature of Michigan divided this purchase into two counties—Des Moines and Dubuque. The boundary between them was a line running due west from the lower end of Rock Island. They also organized a County Court in each county, and for Des Moins County made the seat of justice at Burlington. The first court was held in April, 1835, in a log-house. In 1838 Iowa was made a separate territory, and Burlington the Capital, and so remained until the temporary removal to Iowa City in 1841. The Territorial Legislature met for several years in the first church erected in Burlington, known as "Old Zion." In this same building the supreme judicial tribunal of the territory also held its sessions, as well as the district courts. (See references to Burlington in State History.)

BURLINGTON.

This city is situated on the west bank of the Mississippi River, about 250 miles above St. Louis, and 210 miles from Chicago. It occupies the valley and slopes of the hills at the mouth of a small stream known by the name of Hawkeye Creek. Some facts in the early history of the place have been given. In 1837, the town was incorporated. The town board of trustees appointed James W. Grimes, then a young lawyer, City Solicitor. When notified of his appointment, he appeared and pleaded nonage, but the trustees being satisfied with his age, he proceeded to discharge the duties of his office. This was the beginning of the official career of one who subsequently honored the state as its chief magistrate, and as one of the ablest statesmen in the United States Senate.

During the last few years, Burlington has made a rapid growth. The Mississippi River here is spanned by a splendid railroad bridge, and the city has excellent railroad connections north, south, east and west. An extensive section of productive country must always remain tributary to Burlington. By the census of 1873, the city had a population of 20,156. Its estimated population now is 25,000. Burlington is naturally situated for becoming a great commercial and manufacturing city. With lines of railroad radiating in every direction, bringing to her warehouses the products of near and distant portions of the country; with the Mississippi River at the door, ready to float upon its bosom such products as seek a southern or northern market; with a wealth of timber suited to manufacturing purposes near at hand; with inexhaustible coal deposits within easy reach either east or west, and with the great South and West as an unfailing market for either manufactured articles or general merchandise, it does appear as if a promising future opened before the city; and taking the past as an index for the future, it is not unreasonable to expect great progress in a few years.

The city is now well supplied with excellent schools, and are under the management of efficient and well qualified teachers.

The Burlington University is located here, under the control of the Baptist Church, and occupies a handsome range of buildings situated on the hill rising in the western part of the city.

The city now has some twenty churches, viz.: three Presbyterian, four Baptist, three Catholic, two Congregational, six Methodist, one Christian, and one Episcopal.

Burlington has several lodges of the Masonic Order and Odd Fellows, besides several other benevolent societies and associations; also public library and reading room.

The press is well represented by the Gazette (weekly), Democratic in politics, established June 2, 1857, and the Daily Gazette July 11, 1865. The Gazette Company have extensive job rooms.

The Hawkeye (weekly and daily), Republican in politics, was established in 1839. It is one of the oldest daily papers in the state. Its present editor and publisher is Frank Hatton. Mr. Hatton was formerly of the Mt. Pleasant Journal. He has made the Hawkeye what its name vividly suggests—a sharp and vigilant detector of things in the political and social horizon, which he has no scruples in swooping down upon, if they are lawful editorial prey, and tearing them unmercifully with his sharp beak and claws. He has gained the reputation of being one of the sharpest and most spicy writers in the editorial fraternity of the state.

The Iowa Tribune (German) is another of the Burlington live papers.

FISH HATCHING ESTABLISHMENT.

NEAR ANAMOSA.

The present Fish Law was passed by the Fifteenth General Assembly, and consists of Chap. 50, entitled "An Act to provide for the appointment of a Board of Fish Commissioners for the construction of Fishways for the protection and propagation of Fish." Sections 4052 and 4053 were repealed, and Section 4054 amended. Also Chap. 74, entitled "An Act to provide for furnishing the rivers and lakes with fish and fish spawn."

In compliance with the provisions of the law, the Governor, on the 9th of April, 1874, appointed S. B. Evans, of Ottumwa, Wapello County, B. F. Shaw, of Jones County, and Charles A. Haines, of Blackhawk County, Fish Commissioners.

Said Commissioners met at Des Moines May 10, 1874, and elected S. B. Evans President, B. F. Shaw Secretary and Superintendent, and C. A. Haines Treasurer.

The Commissioners divided the state into three districts, to enable them to more thoroughly superintend the erection and construction of fishways: that part of the state lying south of the Chicago and Rock Island Railroad belongs to and is superintended by S. B. Evans; that lying between the Chicago and Rock Island Railroad, and the Iowa Division of the Illinois Central Railroad by B. F. Shaw, and that north of the Illinois Central Railroad by C. A. Haines. They also

Resolved, That the Superintendent be authorized to build a State Hatching House, and as far as practicable to procure the spawn of valuable fish adapted to the waters of the State of Iowa, and hatch and prepare them for distribution, and as far as possible assist in putting them into the waters of the state.

In the Summer of 1874, Mr. Shaw built for the state, as required by this resolution, a "State Hatching House," a substantial building 20×40 feet, and two stories high—the upper story to be occupied by a family. This building is constructed with direct reference to the attainment of as even a temperature as possible the year round. The interval between the studding is filled with sawdust, from sills to roof, securing warmth in Winter and coolness in Summer. The hatching room, which is the first story, is lined throughout with ship lapped ceiling. Nine rows of zinc lined hatching troughs, sixteen feet long, one foot wide and four inches deep, are firmly fixed on solid benches about three feet from the ground. There are two sections of these troughs, the second section being six inches lower than the first, thus giving a break in the water-flow, and more thoroughly aerating all its parts with needed fresh air for the remainder of the spawn and baby salmon in the second section of troughs. In these troughs is laid a bed of clean gravel, on which rests the fish spawn. This gravel is obtained at the river bank near by, and the very coarse and fine portions sifted out. The medium sized gravel thus obtained is boiled, and every particle of sediment removed, in order that the ova of insects and reptiles may not be introduced into the hatching troughs. At present about two thirds of the troughs are occupied by the California salmon spawn. These eggs are about the size of peas, and resemble the common currant when two thirds ripe. A single layer of spawn is placed on the gravel bed, and over this flows constantly a gentle stream of water, an inch deep, supplied from the distributing trough connecting with the spring reservoir. When the salmon spawn reaches maturity, thousands of tiny fish an inch long are wriggling about, each with its egg sac adhering to its body. This sac furnishes nourishment for the first sixty days of its owner's existence, and after that, milk curd, liver, etc., will be required. In ninety days a portion of the young salmon will be ready for distribution into the different public waters of the state. Over 700,000 have been distributed.

The spring from which the water is supplied is ten feet in diameter, and five feet deep. The water bubbles up from the bottom, and the supply in all seasons is sufficient for quadruple the necessities of the hatching house. Accommodations are already prepared, and more are in course of construction, for white fish and lake trout spawn, which Mr. Shaw expects to procure in Michigan. This spawn is much smaller than that of the salmon, and will not require half the room. The state procures the spawn of the salmon at the expense of the General Government, transportation excepted.

Through the action of the Commissioners there have been distributed within the state, from May 10, 1874, to May 10, 1875—

100,000	Shad.
300,000	California Salmon.
10,000	Bass.
80,000	Penobscot Salmon.
5,000	Land Locked Salmon.
20,000	Other kinds.
515,000	Total.

Chap. 74 appropriated $3,000, and with this sum the hatching house has been built, the propagation and distribution of over half a million valuable fish effected, and enough money left on hand to accomplish greater results in 1875–6 than during the past year.

PEOPLE'S ENCYCLOPEDIA.

A copy of the above work, published by the People's Encyclopedia Company (our neighbors in the Lakeside Building) has been in our office for several months past. It has been of such value to us, that we desire thus publicly to bear testimony to its excellence Hours of valuable time have been saved, as it is complete and from its condensed style a minute's time suffices to obtain all necessary information on any subject, or of any term or proper name.

THE PEOPLE'S ENCYCLOPEDIA is a compilation by L. Colange, LL.D., Editor of Zell's Encyclopedia, and contains in one volume the essence of that voluminous and costly work.

We are informed by the Publishers that the complete work will be sold at the low price of $6.75, which places it within reach of all, and which should place it in the possession of every family.

The following is from their prospectus:

"THE PEOPLE'S ENCYCLOPEDIA, combined and abbreviated in one volume of over 1,000 pages and 700 illustrations, pronouncing every term and proper name.

"For information and general usefulness no book compares with an Encyclopedia, but until the publication of this work, they have been issued in so many volumes, and sold at such enormous prices, that but few have been able to purchase. They also dwell at such length, that too much time is required for ordinary use. The object of this volume has been to condense all that is found in other works of this kind, and tell, in as few words as possible, just what people want to know, omitting details, dry figures and statistics, in most of which few people take interest.

"The following subjects are embraced: Agriculture, Anatomy, Architecture, Archæology, Astronomy, Banking, Biblical Science, Biography, Botany, Chemistry, Commerce, Conchology, Cosmography, Ethics, The Fine Arts, Geography, Geology, Grammar, Heraldry, History, Hydraulics, Hygiene, Jurisprudence, Legislation, Literature, Logic, Mathematics, Mechanical Arts, Metallurgy, Metaphysics, Mineralogy, Military Science, Mining Medicine, Mythology, Natural History and Philosophy, Navigation and Nautical Affairs, Physics, Physiology, Political Economy, Rhetoric, Theology, Zoology, Etc., Etc."

MILLS & COMPANY,

Publishers, Printers, Blank Book Manufacturers, Engravers, Lithographers, Stereotypers, Booksellers, Stationers and Music Dealers,

DES MOINES, IOWA.

The establishment of the above named firm is the most extensive one in Iowa, and taken as a whole is the largest and most complete one of the kind in the entire West; and as a representative concern and managed by representative men, we deem it worthy of the space herein given for a sketch of its HISTORY.

The house was organized in 1856 by F. M. Mills and his brother N. W. Mills, who came from Indiana, at the ages of twenty-five and twenty-two respectively, with slender means but with willing hands and brave hearts, to try their fortunes and "grow up with the country." J. W. Mills, an older brother, was also a partner in the business, but did not remove to Iowa, and afterward disposed of his interest to the younger. The business at first was that of printing alone, both of the brothers having commenced learning that trade at the early age of fourteen, but after a few years the first quit it reluctantly for the field of trade, while the younger studied law, was admitted to the bar, but on coming to Des Moines and seeing their opportunity, they abandoned their whilom pursuits for their first love; so the firm of N. W. Mills & Co. was established with the younger in active charge of the work. The next year it was decided to add a book bindery, and taking a partner (J. S. Carter) in that department a double firm was organized, the printing firm changed to Mills Brothers, and the bindery to Mills & Co. This arrangement continued until after the death of N. W. Mills, who died at Corinth, Miss., Oct. 11, 1862, of wounds received in the hard fought battle at that place, Oct. 3d and 4th, having risen from Second Lieutenant of his Company to command of his regiment, the justly celebrated Second Iowa Infantry, the "Heroes of Fort Donelson." Mr. Carter retiring in 1863, the whole business was merged into one under the firm name of Mills & Co. In the year 1864 the interest of the estate of N. W. Mills was withdrawn, and Mr. J. M. Ross, of Cincinnati, became a partner, and in December, 1866, J. W. Mills rejoined the firm and moved to Des Moines. At this time the firm purchased of Hon. F. W. Palmer, the Iowa State Register for the sum of twenty thousand dollars. The purchase included all the types, presses, furniture and fixtures of that large establishment, as well as the newspaper, its good will, etc., etc. On December 6, 1870, just four years from the date of the purchase they sold the newspaper, with its dress and the press upon which it was printed, to the Messrs. Clarkson Bros., for the sum of thirty thousand dollars, being about twenty-two thousand dollars for the good will alone; more than was paid by Mills & Co. for the entirety when they purchased it. During these four years the paper was twice enlarged, many new features added, large expenditures for telegraphic facilities and correspondence were made. Among the distinctive features introduced by them was the "Tour of Iowa Counties," in which nearly every county in the State was visited, its history, description, resources, and advantages fully written up and published. The benefit of this publication to the State cannot be too highly estimated. Thousands upon thousands of copies of the papers containing these sketches were circulated in the East and in Europe, and have been the means of bringing many thousands of good citizens to the State. Northwestern Iowa was settled up almost within a single year as the result of a series of sketches entitled "Free Homes in Iowa," published in the paper. In a financial point of view the firm would have done well to have retained The Register, after having added to its value, but the other departments had grown upon their hands, and the arduous labors of running a large daily and weekly paper requiring so much night work and such close attention, in addition to the management of the other branches of their business, was beginning to tell upon them, and they resigned its charge into the hands of those whom they knew would not allow it to deteriorate, but would work as earnestly for its improvement and the advancement of the material interests of the State.

Soon after the removal of the Capital to Des Moines, F. M. Mills was elected State Printer, holding that responsible position four successive terms; thereafter, upon the purchase of The State Register, was elected State Printer, the firm doing the State printing for themselves and others for five years. For several years, also, they done under contract, the State printing and binding of the State of Nebraska. They have, also, during their existence as a firm, carried on several other important publishing enterprises. The Iowa Farmer was successfully established by them in 1859, in connection with General Wm. Duane Wilson, but was afterward sold to The Pioneer Farmer. After several changes it found its way back to them under the name of the Iowa Homestead, and after six years of their management, the good will alone of it was sold for six thousand dollars. They also established and published for ten years the Iowa School Journal. In 1867, having already entered the field of Law Publishing, they established the Western Jurist, a law magazine. It was at first issued bi-monthly, but afterward was changed to a monthly. It has continued to grow in worth and importance until almost every lawyer in the State and many of the most prominent in other states are upon its subscription list. Its merit is attested by the fact that the names that first were on the list still remain there, scarcely a lawyer after having received it a single year has discontinued his subscription. It is now as large, as well gotten up and as ably edited as any law periodical in the country.

During the war, forty-seven men were enlisted from their establishment; at one time entirely clearing out the printing office, and reducing the force in the other departments to a corporal's guard. The number of hands now employed ranges from fifty to one hundred. The different men that have worked for them, would form a full regiment if not a brigade, while many of their present force learned their trades in their employ, and some have grown gray in the service. Nearly a million dollars in money have been paid out for wages, since the founding of the house; the pay-roll a good part of the time running from two to three hundred dollars per day; most of their work being high priced labor—notably in the Lithographic and Stereotype Departments, where five and six dollars per day are paid to some of the hands.

From the small concern started in 1856, the business has grown into an extremely heavy one with many departments, all however, dovetailing together in one harmonious whole. These departments have been added from time to time, as the business of the country demanded, or in truth, the requirements of the country have been anticipated. Mills & Co., have in their business enterprises all the time been

PIONEERS.

Their Job Printing business begun in 1856, was the first exclusive Job office west of the Mississippi river towns in the State. Their Bindery added in 1857, was the first and only one for sometime between the Mississippi towns and the Pacific Coast. Their Engraving and Lithographing Department added in 1868, was the first and only one between Chicago and San Francisco, except at St. Louis until within a year or two. This department has grown into such proportions, that steam presses of the most approved patterns have been introduced. Two years ago feeling that their capacity for Book Printing was somewhat abridged, the firm added a first-class Stereotype Foundry, and launched out as regular Book Publishers. This is now the only Stereotype Foundry, as well as the first, between the Lakes and the Pacific, except at St. Louis.

A feature of this house in 1860, was the printing and manufacture of Flags. Over $1,000 worth of small flags were printed by them, principally for wide-awake clubs. This was a large business in that line at that time, and taxed their facilities to the utmost, but they are now preparing to manufacture Banners and Flags of all kinds and sizes, from the smallest size to the largest bunting for the and orders to fifty times the amount of their 1860 business will be promptly met. Everybody will celebrate the hundredth year of our nation's existence, and Mills & Co. will celebrate the twentieth year of their business in Des Moines (which is one-fifth as old as the government), by furnishing flags, etc., for the rest of the patriotic citizens to celebrate with. As it will also be Presidential year, flags for the different parties with appropriate mottoes, etc., will be supplied. The large facilities of the establishment will enable them to fill all orders, as low as any other concern.

When the firm first commenced business they occupied a small room on second street, below the Valley Railroad. This was then in the center of business. The next year they removed to the building on Court Avenue, next door to Ainsworth and Bonbright's present store, in 1858 to the second and third stories of Allen's Bank building, and in 1859 to their own building, erected especially for their business, on Court Avenue, between Second and Third streets. This commodious brick building with three stories and basement, they supposed was large enough for any demand that could be made upon their facilities; the basement was occupied as a press room, the first floor was filled with a complete stock of books and stationery, the second floor was occupied by the printing office, and the third by the bindery. There being no music store in the place, and to supply their calls therefor, they added sheet music, and as a natural sequence were compelled to add musical instruments. This department soon compelled them to seek separate quarters for it, in fact the whole business so grew that it soon became manifest more extended accommodations must be had. This was compulsory after the acquisition of the Register in 1866, so the site of the old Central Presbyterian Church, on Fourth street was secured, and in 1867, now occupied by the firm was erected. The location is most desirable, being central, almost midway between the two principal hotels, the Savery and Aborn, opposite the new Opera House, in the immediate vicinity of the Banks, and prominent business houses, Post Office, and Court Houses, and on the thoroughfare from the depots.

The house was built after plans by W. W. Boyington, of Chicago, containing every feature that the experience of the firm, and the taste of the architect could dictate, and beside being substantial and well adapted for its purposes, is handsome enough to grace the streets of any city, being perhaps the most imposing, as it is the highest, building in the city devoted to business purposes, and comprising with the basement five full working stories. The size is forty-four feet front by eighty feet deep, with boiler house and a detached ware house in the rear. The floors are thrown into double rooms, supported by heavy iron columns in the center. The whole building heated by steam and lighted by gas.

THE BASEMENT

is ten feet in hight, and is occupied by a twenty-horse power engine of best construction, and a line of steam presses, consisting of Adams book, Hoe's large cylinder book and job presses, Potter's newspaper press, with a line of job presses of several different kinds; also the machinery for running the steam elevator, which leads from the basement to the top floor, with doors opening into each story. Each press stands upon a foundation built to receive it, and they are kept perfectly lined up, so that they work true and with little friction. The press-work of the printing department is done here, and a busy place it is. Here is also printed many of the auxiliary plan the large list of newspapers—nearly one hundred different papers—of the State Printing Company. A portion of this floor is set off for the storage of stock, in which is piled large supplies of book and news paper, blank book paper, card board and other printers' stock. In the rear of the building a large underground vault, throroughly fire-proof, has been erected this season, to supplement the smaller vaults in the building, for the storage of their own large stock of valuable stereotype plates and those of their patrons, also their more important engraved stones; so built and arranged that neither from fire or the falling of the building, in case of fire, could there be any danger of their destruction.

THE STORE.

On the main or street floor, an elegant room, the full size of the building, elegantly fitted up with walnut furniture of an elaborate character, with rich show-cases, &c., is kept the large stock of books, stationery, pictures, fancy goods, paper hangings, law books, &c., &c., under the immediate charge of Mr. J. M. Ross, of the firm. Mr. Ross was once a teacher of renown in the city of Cincinnati, and since connecting himself with the house has taken great interest in building up a trade in school supplies of all kinds, and has found the time meanwhile to write a text-book on the local geography of Iowa, with lessons on County, State and Federal government, which has been largely introduced into the schools of the State, and should be in every one of them. A full line of school records and blanks, with school books by the cord, are kept and sold at lowest rates. Chicago wholesale prices are duplicated, so that dealers in Central and Western Iowa can save the difference in freight by buying here. For the retail trade a well selected stock of books, consisting of the best authors, the new issues as they come out, with piles of juveniles, toy books, &c., while daily orders are sent out for books, so that the firm undertakes to furnish any book published in the United States or Europe, on the shortest notice. The County Bible Society's Depository is with them, and a full line, in large quantities, of the American Bible Society's publications are kept in stock to supply the out of town trade, as well as the local demand. In addition, a large stock of family and pocket Bibles, hymn books, prayer books, albums, &c., are kept, suitable not only for ordinary use, but handsomely bound and illustrated for presentation purposes. The holiday trade is an especial feature, and their handsome rooms, crowded with elegant books, richly framed pictures, and hundreds of rare articles for use or ornament, and thronged with customers, is one of the sights that no one in the city during the season fails to see. In this room, on one side, is kept a large stock of first-class pianos, organs, musical instruments, sheet music, church and Sunday School music books, &c. Any instrument desired is supplied, although the specialties are the Decker Bros., the Arion and the Hallett & Cumsten pianos, and the Jewett & Goodman and Loring & Blake organs. They are sold at lowest rates, both wholesale and retail. Parties who are not prepared to buy for cash are enabled, by the heavy capital of the concern, to buy on the monthly or quarterly payment plan.

In the back part of the store room is the office, where Mr. F. M. Mills can now, as for the last twenty years, always be found, in charge of the business department. Under his immediate eye and supervision are the book-keepers, the order and shipping clerks and the traveling agents.

LITHOGRAPHIC DEPARTMENT.

The second floor is mainly occupied by the lithographers. Here work can be seen in all stages of progress. The artist is busy with his designs, the engravers at all varieties of the art, from portraits or cattle views in crayon to the fine line-engraved vignettes and views of buildings and machinery, towns and cities, railroads and States, city, county and railroad bonds, diplomas, certificates of stock, with bank work of all kinds. In an adjoining room the transferers are at work preparing the engraved work for the printers, a long row of whom are at work on hand presses, slowly turning out the finer class of color work, and the jobs of which but few impressions are required, while the rapid rotary steam presses are rushing out at the rate of ten to fifteen thousand a day the large jobs of checks, labels, letter-heads, show cards, maps, &c., ordered in large quantities. A portion of the work on this atlas was executed by them, and does the house no discredit.

On this floor, in front, is the only space in the large building not used for the business of the firm. The Supreme Court occupies a suite of chambers, and the Supreme Court reporter has his office here for convenience of reading proof on his own work, which is constantly in progress. The State Printing Company also have their publication office in this story, so that even the space not actually used by the firm is for purposes auxiliary to their business. Ascending to the third story we find ourselves in the

COMPOSING ROOM.

Here is perhaps the busiest, though the quietest, room in the building. The large room is completely filled with stands, imposing stones, and cases and racks, filled with tons upon tons of type of every conceivable style and in size varying from that of a pin's point to a foot or more in length, the stock constantly being added to as new styles are brought out by the founders, from whom monthly proof sheets of new styles of type are received. A large quantity of type is kept exclusively for stereotyping from and is not used to print from at all, which secures the sharp clear impressions from the plates, for which Mills & Co's work is so noted. This story with its army of trained and tasteful printers, among whom are several ladies, as well as the entire printing department, is under immediate charge of Mr. J. W. Mills, assisted by competent foremen, who allows nothing to pass his critical eye that is not up to his standard, which is a high one. In the same story, in front, is the

where the maps published by the firm, as well as the county and city maps they are constantly getting up for others, are colored. The delicate and harmonious tinting on their maps speaks highly for the artistic taste of the young ladies in this department.

THE FRAME ROOM

where the engravings, chromos, lithographs, photographs, etc., sold in the store below or brought in by their patrons, are set in handsome frames, also occupies a good sized room in the front of this story. Piles of mouldings of all styles line the room, and new patterns are received as fast as introduced by the manufacturers. They also supply dealers and frame makers throughout the country, at a very small advance over New York prices.

On reaching the fourth story, our ears are almost deafened by the noise of machinery of different kinds, and pounding of the most vigorous character. We are first ushered into where we soon lose ourselves amid the multitudinous piles of books of all kind in various states of progress. Piles of sheets fresh from the press room are being hung on the lines to dry or going into boards preparatory to being dry-pressed. A dozen nimble-fingered girls are folding sheets into pages, or gathering them into books or sewing them section by section. A man at a machine is backing a pile of books, other men at other machines are swiftly trimming them, while a long row of men are putting them in leather. At the embossing press heated by steam, a man is stamping the sides of a lot of books one by one with a girl at hand laying on the gold, and at the finisher's stand, with other assistants to lay on gold, paste up the books, and put on the finishing touches, is the worthy foreman of the room. At the numbering machine a good looking young lady is putting the units, tens and thousands upon a lot of bank drafts just from the lithograph room, while another is paging a pile of Records handsomely bound in Russia, just ready to ship to some county in Missouri, Nebraska, Kansas or Dakota, or in our own State. The ruling machines are grinding away, as they have been, in season and out of season, for these many years, and at one end of the room a number of men are mounting and varnishing maps. Almost distracted by the variety and extent of the work as well as by the din, we step into an adjoining room and find the

where are made the plates for the books published by this firm, as well as those for their patrons, for whom blanks, engravings, and jobs of various kinds are also stereotyped. The process in use here is the new improved process used in the government stereotype foundry at Washington City, and which has not been introduced as yet west of Philadelphia. The superior plates produced by Mills & Co., and which have brought them considerable business from other points in our own as well as distant States, must not alone be ascribed to the superior process, but also to the first-class workmen in the department. The stereotyper must have a careful eye, a skillful hand, and good judgment as well as long practice, if he would turn out good and true work. Mills & Co. have been fortunate in this regard, in the selection of their stereotypers as they have in employees in the other departments. Having watched the workman in the process of preparing his mould, taking the impression of the type form sent to him from the printer, in filling it with the molton metal, in sawing, planing, blocking and finishing his plate, and completed our round, and after ascending the steps leading to the roof and taking a view of the finest city in Iowa, and as fine a location for one as can be seen in the Union, we descend to terra firma, surprised at the extent of these facilities and the magnitude of the business of the firm whose sketch we have written, and impressed by the enterprise, tact and good judgment shown in the conduct of their business as PUBLISHERS.

Their judgment and discrimination in the publication of books is evidenced by the fact that in the law department especially, every book they have issued has been a success. Their Code of Practice of 1860, issued in advance of the State edition was at once promptly taken up by the profession, as was their edition of the Code of 1873, so much preferred by the bar on account of its superior index and binding. Hammond's Digest, of which 1,000 copies were printed, has long been out of print. The first edition of the Iowa Justice, by Judge Conklin, though a double edition, was exhausted long ago, and since its revision under the Code of 1873, by Judge Conklin and Prof. Bissell, it has passed through two editions and is on the way to a third.

The Probate Manual, by A. N. Porter, Esq.; and the Official Guide, a treatise on county and township officers, by Hon. G. W. Fields, are now both being revised for a third edition. The first four volumes of Iowa Reports, by Withrow were published by them, and although issued when their establishment was in its infancy, they stand as among the best executed volumes of the series. While the 38th, by Runnells, just from their press and bindery, is justly awarded the place of the best and most handsomely executed volume of the set, fully up to the standard of their work as shown in their new series of Reports, by Judge Cole being an annotated edition of the scarce volumes of Iowa Reports, which has elicited the highest commendations from the bench and the press for the beauty of their execution as well as the merits of the author's work; showing that their exertions are not spasmodic, but the result of a determination to build up and maintain a reputation for first-class work. This well-earned reputation is further hightened by the handsome specimen of their handicraft on Judge Miller's new and revised work on Pleading and Practice under the Code, which stands as one of the best samples of law book making yet executed in America. No State in the Union has published so creditable a Geological Report as the two large and splendidly gotten up volumes containing the result of the exploration and observations of Dr. White, the State Geologist, the copyright of which belongs to Messrs. Mills & Co., to whom belongs the credit not only of the handsome printing and binding, but of the beautifully executed maps, diagrams, views, engravings, etc., with which the volumes are profusely illustrated, and which prove that our noble State is not the bare plain it was formerly represented, but that it can fairly claim a place as "Picturesque Iowa," as they will further show by plans they have in progress of preparation for a more pretentious work of the character than they have yet attempted.

Their Job Printing also has for near twenty years been the standard of excellence in the West.

In the manufacture of Blank Books they claim to have better facilities than any concern in the West. One thing is certain: the books they turn out are first class in every respect. The best paper is used, and the books bound in the most durable manner, and the most skeptical have only to look in the bookshelves and vaults of nearly every county in Iowa, and most of the banks, to verify their claims. Their labors do not seem to be merely for the day, but for the sake of building up an establishment whose reputation shall live after them, and it is safe to say that its existence for the last twenty years, and all the time under the conduct principally of the same parties, proves the fact that their labors in this regard have not been in vain. In our young State not many houses have been established and stood for twenty years. Yet this one seems to be as progressive as public spirited and as young at heart, as its heads were twenty years ago when they came here as boys, although they are beginning to grow gray in the service, and there is not a citizen of Iowa that does not point to it with pride as a representative establishment, and one by which the State is best known abroad; indeed for years Des Moines was best known not only in Iowa, but in the States and Territories west as the headquarters of the enterprising and aggressive firm of Mills & Co. Almost the only trade for the town brought from a distance was through its agents. It was the largest customer in the State to the United States Express Co. and to the postoffice, as it probably is to-day in the city to both of them. Packages being constantly received and shipped to and from all parts of the United States, and their annual postage bill running up into the thousands.

To show the extent of the publishing business of the firm, we intended if space had permitted, to add here, to close this sketch, a Catalogue of their principal publications, which contains over 75 volumes of current works, mostly Law, a valuable addition to which has recently been made, by the purchase of the copyrights and plates of the sixteen volumes of Iowa Reports, by Stiles, at a cost of about ten thousand dollars, thus with their editions of Cole's and Runnells' Reports vesting the proprietorship of nearly the entire set of Iowa Reports in them. Their catalogue also includes quite a list of sheet music of their own publication; over one thousand legal and official blanks, and a series of valuable State, City and County Maps, and a complete set of School District Records, Blanks, etc. They will cheerfully send catalogues and price lists of their publications, and give prices for any goods in their line, or estimates for any job of work however large or small, in any of their departments. They do not allow themselves to be undersold, and take a pride in being able to duplicate Chicago, St. Louis, Cincinnati, or even New York or Philadelphia prices on any of their specialties.
